INTRODUCTION.

THIS selection comprises, with only one notable exception (Comus *), all the English poetry that Milton wrote between 1629 and 1660—a period of more than thirty years. On the former date he had already been four years at the University of Cambridge, and on the latter he had finally escaped from the political troubles that had beset him for nearly twenty years and had set to work in earnest upon his great epic, Paradise Lost. If we divide his life into three periods, as detailed below, we find that the poems in this volume belong to the first and second of these, and, if we exclude the Sonnets (except Nos. I. and II.), entirely to the first. We have to deal, therefore, with the products of Milton's earlier or lyrical muse ; his later or epic muse found expression in the third and last period of his life. In the second or middle period he lived for the most part in what he called “ the cool element of prose.”

In spite of its unique tripartition Milton's life was a coherent whole ; and no amount of attention to a few of his poems and a few passages of his prose can altogether compensate for a disregard of any considerable portion of his writings. We have to take account, not only of the author of L'Allegro and Paradise Lost, but also of the Renaissance scholar, the schoolmaster, the Latin

Secretary, the historian, the politician, the theologian, the social and religious reformer. Hence it is not easy to arrive at a just estimate of the whole man. The difficulty is expressed by M. Scherer in these words: "Elegant poet and passionate disputant, accomplished humanist and narrow sectary, admirer of Petrarch, of Shakespeare, and hair-splitting interpreter of Bible texts, smitten with pagan antiquity, and smitten with the Hebrew genius; and all this at once, without effort, naturally; an historical problem, a literary enigma."

When we speak of the three divisions of Milton's life we are, accordingly, fixing attention on the kind and distribution of his literary activities rather than on any essential distinctions of character or purpose. The three periods are:

I. Early years, College and Country life, and Travel, 1625-39.

II. Politics and Controversy, 1640-60.

III. The Great Poems, 1660-74.

I. John Milton was born in London on 9th December, 1608, about eight years before the death of Shakespeare. His father, a prosperous scrivener, was a man of piety and culture, and chose as his son's first tutor a Puritan divine named Thomas Young. In his twelfth year the boy was entered as a day-scholar at St. Paul's School, and there he attended for four or five years. Before he left this school he had made good progress in Greek and Latin, he knew some Hebrew, and he had also, by his father's advice, studied French and Italian. His own account of these laborious pre-college days is as follows: "My father destined me while yet a boy for the study of humane letters, which I seized with such eagerness, that from the twelfth year of my age I scarcely ever went from my lessons to bed before midnight ; which indeed was the first cause of injury to my eyes, to whose natural weakness there were also added frequent headaches. All which not retarding my impetuosity in learning, he caused me to be daily instructed, both at the grammar-school and under other masters at home, and then when I had acquired various tongues, and also not some insignificant taste for the sweetness of philosophy, he sent me to Cambridge." He had already shown some facility in the writing of verses, but only two paraphrases of psalms have come down to us ; these were written when he was fifteen years old.

In February, 1625, six weeks before the accession of Charles I., Milton was enrolled at Christ's College, Cambridge, and for seven years he studied there. He took the B.A. degree in 1628-9, and became M.A. in July, 1632. To these college years we can definitely assign, besides a number of Latin and Italian pieces, the following English poems :—On the Death of a Fair Infant (1625-6)—his first original poem in his native tongue ; At a Vacation Exercise (1628) ; On the Morning of Christ's Nativity (1629) ; an unfinished piece on The Passion (1630) ; also the five short poems that follow the Nativity ode in this volume, and the first and second sonnets.

But this enumeration probably does not make up the total of Milton's poetical efforts while a Cambridge student. Of certain other poems—Of Time, At a Solemn Music, Upon the Circumcision, Arcades, L'Allegro and Il Penseroso—the exact date of composition is a subject of conjecture ; they are alternatively referred either to the closing years at Cambridge or to the early years at Horton. These six poems bear witness to the remarkable development of Milton's metrical art. The first trio, all on solemn subjects, show intricate combinations of long with short lines, and of couplets with quatrains (abba, abab) and longer stanzas. The second trio, with their pastoral atmosphere, have generally been associated with Milton's life at Horton either during his vacations or afterwards; in their metres and matter they are closely akin to the lyrical parts of Comus, and were all composed not later than 1634. It is at least clear that before he left Cambridge Milton had already found his true vocation—poetry; and, in obedience to an “inward prompting” to fit himself for his life-work by labour and arduous study, he gave up all intention of preparing for the Church, left the University after taking his degrees, and retired at the age of twenty-three to the small village of Horton, where his father had settled on leaving London. Horton is near Windsor, and about twenty miles from the metropolis, and here Milton for six years pursued a course of self-education that had a profound effect upon his future writings.

During the quiet years at Horton (1632-38) Milton ranged freely over classical, post-classical, medieval, and contemporary literature, accumulating the material that went to build Paradise Lost. He continued his study of the Italian poets, and his five Italian Sonnets (Sonnets III.-VII.) were very probably written during this period. Before he left Horton he had two more poems to his credit, the masque Comus (1634) and the elegy Lycidas (1637); these form, along with Arcades and L'Allegro and Il Penseroso, a group of poems of which it has been said that, even though their author had not written Paradise Lost, they “ would have sufficed to place him in a class apart, and above all those who had used the English language for poetical purposes before him.” Yet Milton himself regarded them as no more than the first fruits of his genius ; he had, in his own estimation, shattered the leaves of his poetic laurels “ before the mellowing year.”

In April, 1638, Milton set out on a journey to Italy, the classic land of poetry and art. He spent some months in Florence and Rome, and was in Naples when “ the sad news of civil war ” reached him ; he resolved to turn his face homewards, “ for,” he said, “ I thought it disgraceful, while my fellow-countrymen were fighting for liberty, that I should be travelling abroad for pleasure.” He retraced his steps in a leisurely manner, and arrived in England in August, 1639. It was in this year that he wrote Epitaphium Damonis, a Latin elegy on his dear friend Charles Diodati, to whom allusion is made in the notes on Lycidas (line 165). This may be regarded as the true close of Milton’s career as a lyrical poet ; some translations, paraphrases and sonnets are all that followed.

II. Towards the close of 1639 Milton took lodgings in London, and hoped to apply himself to his favourite studies with a view to the production of some great English poem ; in 1640 he actually made preliminary jottings for Paradise Lost. But his hope was not fulfilled. The Scots had rebelled against Episcopacy, and Milton, as an enthusiast for church reform, was in sympathy with them. The famous Long Parliament had already resisted in a number of ways the unconstitutional conduct of Charles I., and had decided to sweep away the abuses in the Episcopal Church. How best to do this was the important question, and to the answering of this Milton devoted himself with all the fervour of his truly religious spirit.

Then, in 1642, the Civil War began, and Milton, of course, declared for the side of the Parliament. About this time he nevertheless married a lady belonging to a Royalist family; after less than two months she left him and stayed away for two years. On her return he showed a magnanimous spirit towards her and her impecunious relatives, who had for a long time been financially a source of annoyance to him (see Stevens: Milton Papers, 1927). In the meantime her desertion of him had turned his attention to the question of divorce, and the new controversy between the Presbyterians and the Independents provided still more work for his pen. Throughout all the din and smoke of war we catch only a few glimpses of the poet as distinct from the pamphleteer; how few these glimpses are the sonnets composed in these years will show. From 1640 to 1648, when the last embers of the Civil War were finally extinguished, Milton wrote nothing in poetry except nine sonnets (VIII.-XV.) and a few Latin pieces. And during the next ten years, when he was in the employment of the new government and when upon him was thrown the task of answering all attacks made upon it, he wrote, along with much prose, nothing more than his eight remaining sonnets (XVI.-XXIII.) and a few scraps in Latin. His last sonnet was written in 1658, the year of Cromwell's death. Milton continued in office as Latin Secretary, and within a few weeks of the Restoration we find him issuing projects for the best means of establishing a free commonwealth. He had been totally blind since 1652 ; in 1653-4 his first wife died, and in 1656 he married again, but his second wife died fifteen months after the marriage ; in 1664 he married a third time.

A review of Milton's second or middle period shows two groups of compositions, diverse yet to some extent interconnected. In both groups—prose works and sonnets—we find that the prevailing symbolism and allusions are drawn more freely from actual experience and from Scripture than from classical sources. In both alike are found many of the features of the Miltonic style : we may refer to what Coleridge called “ etymological truth of expression,” the pairing of terms, the permanent imagery and epithets, the formation of compound words, the use of sonorous collocations, inversions, balanced constructions, Latinisms, and the placing of a noun between two adjectives. Milton's prose is the prose of a poet ; it is the natural product of his training and temperament. Few poets have written so much prose, and still fewer have written so much that was long regarded as of little value. But later estimates of Milton's prose tend to do more justice both to the style and to the matter. Viewed merely as “ the verbal translation of mental energy ” it has a literary value ; Professor Trent declares that among our modern writers “ there has never been a master of sonorous and eloquent prose who did not owe more than he was perhaps aware of to the Areopagitica.” It is even claimed that Milton as a man of ideas has profoundly influenced the thought and culture of subsequent times, and that in every field of thought, political, ethical, and religious, he is abreast of the modern world (comp. Larson, The Modernity of Milton).

Milton wrote more than twenty pamphlets, a heavy task that cost him his eyesight. Four of them deal with divorce, one with education, one with liberty of publishing, and the remainder with ecclesiastical and civil government. In all of them he challenged detraction, yet it is now admitted that his one and only consideration was his duty to proclaim the truth as he saw it, and to plead for liberty of thought and utterance. Even the divorce pamphlets, alluded to in Sonnets XI. and XII., are not now regarded as merely voicing a personal grievance; they are accepted as a just effort to educate public and ecclesiastical opinion, and his arguments are still worthy of unprejudiced examination.

Milton wrote twenty-four English sonnets; as a whole they display originality in the choice both of subjects and of form. "Two striking differences become apparent when Milton's sonnets are compared with those of his English predecessors—a much greater variety of subjects, and a new poetic manner. The sonnet was now being composed by a poet whose standards were classical; precision of utterance, careful selection of words, the simple and clear expression of definite ideas, had superseded the old abundance and vague luxuriance. . . . He departed from the prosody most familiar to his English predecessors, and aimed at a more pure and regular method, according to Italian precedent" (Smart, The Sonnets of Milton). The sonnets bear witness to Milton's consciousness of his divine gift of poesy, his patient and cheerful courage, his burning indignation against oppression and wrong, his readiness to bestow admiration and friendship, and his devoutly religious spirit.*

III. At the Restoration the poet was for a short time placed under arrest, but at last he was able to take up the task that had been laid aside for so long, and in 1665 the composition of Paradise Lost was completed. It was followed in 1671 by Paradise Regained and Samson Agonistes. Of the latter Professor Ker says: "Samson Agonistes is one of the noblest poems ever written, and the artifice detracts nothing from the work, which is a lyrical drama of heroism. The division into scenes and the chorus are not really Greek: the Greek drama is meant for the stage and planned for theatrical effect. Samson Agonistes is meant to be read, to call up in the minds of the readers the Greek plays which they have not seen acted but only read" (Form and Style in Poetry). In 1673 Milton published a reprint of the 1645 edition of his poems, adding nine of his sonnets. Other works written partly or wholly in this period were a Latin grammar (1669), a History of Britain (1670), a treatise on Logic (1672), Familiar Epistles, etc., in Latin (1674), a brief History of Moscovia (pub. 1682), and a Latin treatise on Christian Doctrines (pub. 1825). "Worn by attacks of gout, but cheerful and even joyous in the intervals of pain," the poet died on 8th November, 1674.

We may now consider briefly the leading characteristics of Milton's unique individuality and genius.

1. First of all we may note his early and settled conviction that poetry was his vocation. Before he was twenty-three years of age he had discovered that "whether aught was imposed upon me by them that had the overlooking or betaken to of mine own choice, in English or other tongue, prosing or versing, but chiefly this latter, the style, by certain vital signs it had, was likely to live." In 1637, just before he wrote Lycidas, he felt that God had instilled into him a vehement love of the beautiful, and declared that he was "wont day and night to seek for this idea of the beautiful through all the forms and faces of things. . . . You ask me what I am thinking of? So may the good Deity help me, of immortality."—Letter to Diodati.

2. Along with this we note his sense of the greatness of the poet's task, and his consequent self-appreciation, which, however, must not be mistaken for self-conceit: as Professor Raleigh says, "None of the later critics, not the most cavalier nor the dullest, has dared to call him vain." His ideal was too high to admit of his being other than truly modest. He looked for inspiration to "that eternal Spirit who can enrich with all utterance and knowledge, and sends out His seraphim with the hallowed fire of His altar, to touch and purify the lips of whom He pleases."—Reason of Church Government (1641).

3. His rule of life was therefore a strict one; the inward ripeness that he desired could be attained in one way only—by the noblest purity in every thought and action. "Long it was not after when I was confirmed in this opinion, that he who would not be frustrate of his hope to write well hereafter in laudable things ought himself to be a true poem—that is, a composition and pattern of the best and honourablest things."—Apology for Smectymnurus (1642). As a part of his austerity of life we may specially note his strictly temperate habits; in his sixth elegy he tells us that they who would hope to sing of heroes and to explore the counsels of Heaven must live simply. Yet Sonnets XX. and XXI. show clearly that he did not despise moderate indulgence in the pleasures of the social hour : he was neither a recluse nor an ascetic.

4. He was a man of industrious and select reading ; his knowledge was most extensive. “ Whatever of learning, of science, or of discipline in logic or philosophy, the University at that time could give, he had duly and in the largest measure acquired. No better Greek or Latin scholar probably had the University in that age sent forth ; he was proficient in the Hebrew tongue, and in all the other customary aids to a Biblical Theology ; and he could speak and write well in French and Italian. His acquaintance, obtained by independent reading, with the history and with the whole body of the literature of ancient and modern nations, was extensive and various ” (Masson). In his prose works and in Paradise Lost there are many traces of his study of Talmudic and cabbalistic writings. When he left the University and went to Horton he devoted himself, as already noted, to a steady perusal of the Greek and Latin writers, and was eager to learn “ anything new in Mathematics or in Music.” And just before he was whirled into the controversies of Church and State he was still looking forward to a time of hard study. From this point of view we may think of Milton as one imbued with the spirit and tastes of the Renaissance, open to all the wholesome influences of nature, and eager to gather the harvest of knowledge from sources old and new, sacred and profane.

5. His religious fervour was as much a part of himself as was his poetic temperament. Hence, in the controversial war in which he engaged, he believed his task to have been imposed upon him by Heaven in no less degree than that other task of writing a great poem. It is upon this aspect of his character that stress is usually laid when he is spoken of as "the Puritan poet." But his unvarying seriousness of purpose, as well as his sense of "the sublime notion and high mystery" of life, must not be allowed to obscure every other side of his complex nature. Dr. Garnett with much reason attributes the superiority of Milton's poetical genius, making him a poet for the world, to the fact that "in him and in him alone the Hebraic and the Hellenic spirit appear thoroughly at one."

6. His idealism, his vision of all that is best and highest in thought and action, was based not only on his own intense individuality, but also on his sincere belief in his fellowmen. As M. Saurat says, "There was deeply rooted in Milton a tendency to look upon himself not as an exception in the romantic manner, but as a normal representative of human nature. His high opinion of himself is also a high opinion of man. In the divorce pamphlets as well as in the letter on education, in politics as well as in religion, he always tried to apply to others such rules and methods as he found good for himself." It is to this trait, and not to vanity or arrogance, that we may charitably attribute the impatience and intolerance he often exhibited; he expected too much from the ordinary man or woman. Yet his desire was to serve them. In judging Milton we must allow for the combination in him of the moral idealism of the reformer with the emotional temperament of the poet.

7. His love of music is an important element of his genius. His father was no mean musician, and both father and son numbered famous musicians among their friends. He had "the ear and the passion for harmony," and was skilled in both vocal and instrumental music. His style is everywhere dominated by his mastery over the effects of music, and his works are full of expressions of his love for it. It influences his choice of words, his selection of a particular form of a word, and even his pronunciation; it explains many of those inversions so common in his poetry; it accounts for his use of alliterative and assonantal phrases, and for the form of many of the compound epithets that he coined so freely; it heightens the charm of his songs; and, finally, it has enabled him once for all to stamp the character of English blank verse. For this reason it is necessary that Milton should be read aloud, if the Miltonic rhythms and harmonies are to be fully appreciated. Even in his prose, though he did not there display the artistic self-possession that marks his poetry, he is, as Professor Saintsbury says, "a great word-virtuoso." A part of his appeal is always to the ear, and in reading him we ought to invoke both of the "sphere-born harmonious Sisters, Voice and Verse."

8. Bound up with the preceding characteristics is his laborious striving after perfection of workmanship. Of this the scrutiny of his revised and corrected manuscripts and editions provides emphatic evidence. We may close our survey with the words of Matthew Arnold on this point: "If to our English race an inadequate sense for perfection of work is a real danger, if the discipline of respect for a high and flawless excellence is peculiarly needed by us, Milton is of all our gifted men the best lesson, the most salutary influence. In the sure and flawless perfection of his rhythm and diction he is as admirable as Virgil or Dante, and in this respect he is unique amongst us. No one else in English literature and art possesses the like distinction."

MILTON'S NATIVITY ODE,
L'ALLEGRO, IL PENSEROSO, ARCADES,
LYCIDAS, SONNETS, Etc.

ON THE MORNING OF CHRIST'S NATIVITY.

THIS is the month, and this the happy morn
Wherein the Son of Heav'n's Eternal King,
Of wedded maid and virgin mother born,
Our great redemption from above did bring;
For so the holy sages once did sing,
That he our deadly forfeit should release,
And with his Father work us a perpetual peace.

That glorious Form, that Light unsufferable,
And that far-beaming blaze of Majesty
Wherewith he wont at Heaven's high council-table      10
To sit the midst of Trinal Unity,
He laid aside; and, here with us to be,
Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay.

Say, heavenly Muse, shall not thy sacred vein
Afford a present to the Infant-God?
Hast thou no verse, no hymn, or solemn strain,
To welcome him to this his new abode,

2 ON THE MORNING OF CHRIST'S NATIVITY.

Now while the heav'n, by the sun's team untrod,
Hath took no print of the approaching light, 20
And all the spangled host keep watch in squadrons bright ?

See how from far upon the eastern road
The star-led wizards haste with odours sweet :
O run, prevent them with thy humble ode
And lay it lowly at his blessed feet ;
Have thou the honour first thy Lord to greet.
And join thy voice unto the angel quire,
From out his secret altar touch'd with hallow'd fire.

THE HYMN.

It was the winter wild
While the heav'n-born Child 30
All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies ;
Nature in awe to him
Had doff'd her gaudy trim,
With her great Master so to sympathize :
It was no season then for her
To wanton with the sun, her lusty paramour.

Only with speeches fair
She woos the gentle air
To hide her guilty front with innocent snow ;
And on her naked shame, 40
Pollute with sinful blame,
The saintly veil of maiden white to throw,
Confounded, that her Maker's eyes
Should look so near upon her foul deformities.

But He, her fears to cease,
Sent down the meek-eyed Peace ;

She, crown'd with olive green, came softly sliding
 Down through the turning sphere
 His ready harbinger,
 With turtle wing the amorous clouds dividing ; 50
 And waving wide her myrtle wand,
 She strikes a universal peace through sea and land.

No war, or battle's sound
 Was heard the world around :
 The idle spear and shield were high up hung ;
 The hookéd chariot stood
 Unstain'd with hostile blood ;
 The trumpet spake not to the arméd throng ;
 And kings sate still with awful eye,
 As if they surely knew their sovran Lord was by. 60

But peaceful was the night
 Wherein the Prince of Light
 His reign of peace upon the earth began :
 The winds, with wonder whist,
 Smoothly the waters kist,
 Whispering new joys to the mild Océan—
 Who now hath quite forgot to rave,
 While birds of calm sit brooding on the charméé wave.

The stars, with deep amaze,
 Stand fix'd in steadfast gaze, 70
 Bending one way their precious influence,
 And will not take their flight,
 For all the morning light,
 Or Lucifer that often warn'd them thence ;
 But in their glimmering orbs did glow
 Until their Lord himself bespake, and bid them go.

And though the shady gloom
 Had given day her room,

4 ON THE MORNING OF CHRIST'S NATIVITY.

The sun himself withheld his wonted speed,
And hid his head for shame, 80
As his inferior flame
The new-enlighten'd world no more should need ;
He saw a greater Sun appear
Than his bright throne, or burning axletree could bear.

The shepherds on the lawn,
Or ere the point of dawn,
Sate simply chatting in a rustic row ;
Full little thought they than
That the mighty Pan
Was kindly come to live with them below ; 90
Perhaps their loves, or else their sheep
Was all that did their silly thoughts so busy keep.

When such music sweet
Their hearts and ears did greet
As never was by mortal finger strook—
Divinely-warbled voice
Answering the stringéd noise,
As all their souls in blissful rapture took :
The air, such pleasure loth to lose,
With thousand echoes still prolongs each heavenly close.

Nature that heard such sound 101
Beneath the hollow round
Of Cynthia's seat the aery region thrilling,
Now was almost won
To think her part was done,
And that her reign had here its last fulfilling ;
She knew such harmony alone
Could hold all heaven and earth in happier union.

At last surrounds their sight
A globe of circular light, 110

That with long beams the shamefaced night array'd ;
 The helméd Cherubim
 And sworded Seraphim
 Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd,
 Harping in loud and solemn quire,
 With unexpressive notes to Heaven's new-born Heir.

Such music (as 'tis said)
 Before was never made,
 But when of old the Sons of Morning sung,
 While the Creator great 120
 His constellations set,
 And the well-balanced world on hinges hung ;
 And cast the dark foundations deep,
 And bid the weltring waves their oozy channel keep.*

Ring out, ye crystal spheres !
 Once bless our human ears,
 If ye have power to touch our senses so ;
 And let your silver chime
 Move in melodious time ;
 And let the bass of heaven's deep organ blow : 130
 And with your ninefold harmony
 Make up full consort to the angelic symphony.

For if such holy song
 Enwrap our fancy long,
 Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold ;
 And speckled Vanity
 Will sicken soon and die,
 And leprous Sin will melt from earthly mould ;
 And Hell itself will pass away,
 And leave her dolorous mansions to the peering day. 140

Yea, Truth and Justice then
 Will down return to men,

6 ON THE MORNING OF CHRIST'S NATIVITY.

Orb'd in a rainbow ; and, like glories wearing,
Mercy will sit between,
Throned in celestial sheen,
With radiant feet the tissued clouds down steering,
And Heaven, as at some festival,
Will open wide the gates of her high palace-hall.

But wisest Fate says No ;
This must not yet be so ; 150
The Babe yet lies in smiling infancy
That on the bitter cross
Must redeem our loss ;
So both Himself and us to glorify :
Yet first, to those ychain'd in sleep
The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through the deep,

With such a horrid clang
As on Mount Sinai rang
While the red fire and smouldering clouds outbrake ;
The aged Earth aghast 160
With terrour of that blast
Shall from the surface to the centre shake,
When, at the world's last sesión,
The dreadful Judge in middle air shall spread His throne.

And then at last our bliss
Full and perfect is,
But now begins ; for from this happy day
The old Dragon under ground
In straiter limits bound,
Not half so far casts his usurpéd sway ; 170
And, wroth to see his kingdom fail,
Swinges the scaly horror of his folded tail.

The Oracles are dumb ;
No voice or hideous hum

Runs through the archéd roof in words deceiving :
 Apollo from his shrine
 Can no more divine,
 With hollow shriek the steep of Delphos leaving :
 No nightly trance, or breathéd spell,
 Inspires the pale-eyed priest from the prophetic cell. 180

The lonely mountains o'er
 And the resounding shore
 A voice of weeping heard and loud lament ;
 From haunted spring, and dale
 Edged with poplar pale,
 The parting Genius is with sighing sent ;
 With flower-inwoven tresses torn
 The Nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn.

In consecrated earth,
 And on the holy hearth, 190
 The Lars and Lemures moan with midnight plaint ;
 In urns, and altars round,
 A drear and dying sound
 Affrights the Flamens at their service quaint ;
 And the chill marble seems to sweat,
 While each peculiar Power forgoes his wonted seat.

Peor and Baälim
 Forsake their temples dim,
 With that twice-batter'd god of Palestine ;
 And moonéd Ashtaroth 200
 Heaven's queen and mother both,
 Now sits not girt with tapers' holy shine,
 The Libyc Hammon shrinks his horn,
 In vain the Tyrian maids their wounded Thammuz mourn.

And sullen Moloch, fled,
 Hath left in shadows dread

8 ON THE MORNING OF CHRIST'S NATIVITY.

His burning idol all of blackest hue ;
In vain with cymbals' ring
They call the grisly king,
In dismal dance about the furnace blue ; 210
The brutish gods of Nile as fast,
Isis, and Orus, and the dog Anubis, haste.

Nor is Osiris seen
In Memphian grove, or green,
Trampling the unshower'd grass with lowings loud :
Nor can he be at rest
Within his sacred chest ;
Naught but profoundest Hell can be his shroud ;
In vain with timbrell'd anthems dark
The sable-stoléd sorcerers bear his worshipt ark. 220

He feels from Juda's land
The dreaded Infant's hand ;
The rays of Bethlehem blind his dusky eyn ;
Nor all the gods beside Longer dare abide,
Not Typhon huge ending in snaky twine :
Our Babe, to show his Godhead true,
Can in his swaddling bands control the damnéd crew

So, when the sun in bed
Curtain'd with cloudy red 230
Pillows his chin upon an orient wave,
The flocking shadows pale
Troop to th' infernal jail,
Each fetter'd ghost slips to his several grave ;
And the yellow-skirted fays
Fly after the night-steeds, leaving their moon-loved maze.

But see the Virgin blest
Hath laid her Babe to rest ;

Time is our tedious song should here have ending :
 Heaven's youngest-teeméd star 240
 Hath fixed her polish'd car,
 Her sleeping Lord with hand-maid lamp attending :
 And all about the courtly stable
 Bright-harness'd angels sit in order serviceable.

SONG ON MAY MORNING.

Now the bright morning-star, Day's harbinger,
 Comes dancing from the east, and leads with her
 The flow'ry May, who from her green lap throws
 The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose.

Hail, bounteous May, that dost inspire
 ! Mirth, and youth, and warm desire !

Woods and groves are of thy dressing ;

Hill and dale doth boast thy blessing.

Thus we salute thee with our early song,
 And welcome thee, and wish thee long. 10

ON SHAKESPEARE. 1630.

WHAT needs my Shakespeare for his honoured bones
 The labour of an age in pilèd stones ?
 Or that his hallowed reliques should be hid
 Under a star-ypointing pyramid ?
 Dear son of memory, great heir of Fame,
 What need'st thou such weak witness of thy name ?
 Thou in our wonder and astonishment
 Hast built thyself a livelong monument.

For whilst, to th' shame of slow-endeavouring art,
 Thy easy numbers flow, and that each heart 10
 Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued book
 Those Delphic lines with deep impression took,
 Then thou, our fancy of itself bereaving,
 Dost make us marble with too much conceiving ;
 And so sepulchred in such pomp dost lie
 That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

ON THE UNIVERSITY CARRIER.

Who sickened in the time of his Vacancy, being forbid to go to London by reason of the Plague.

HERE lies old Hobson. Death hath broke his girt,
 And here, alas ! hath laid him in the dirt ;
 Or else, the ways being foul, twenty to one
 He's here stuck in a slough, and overthrown.
 'Twas such a shifter that, if truth were known,
 Death was half glad when he had got him down ;
 For he had any time this ten years full
 Dodged with him betwixt Cambridge and The Bull.
 And surely, Death could never have prevailed,
 Had not his weekly course of carriage failed ; 10
 But lately, finding him so long at home,
 And thinking now his journey's end was come,
 And that he had ta'en up his latest inn,
 In the kind office of a chamberlin
 Showed him his room where he must lodge that night,
 Pulled off his boots, and took away the light :
 If any ask for him, it shall be said,
 Hobson has supped, and's newly gone to bed."

ANOTHER ON THE SAME.

HERE lieth one who did most truly prove,
That he could never die while he could move ;
So hung his destiny, never to rot
While he might still jog on and keep his trot ;
Made of sphere-metal, never to decay
Until his revolution was at stay.
Time numbers motion, yet (without a crime
'Gainst old truth) motion numbered out his time ;
And, like an engine moved with wheel and weight,
His principles being ceased, he ended straight. 10
Rest, that gives all men life, gave him his death,
And too much breathing put him out of breath ;
Nor were it contradiction to affirm
Too long vacation hastened on his term.
Merely to drive the time away he sickened,
Fainted and died, nor would with ale be quickened.
" Nay," quoth he, on his swooning bed outstretched,
" If I may not carry, sure I'll ne'er be fetched,
But vow, though the cross doctors all stood hearers,
For one carrier put down to make six bearers." 20
Ease was his chief disease ; and, to judge right,
He died for heaviness that his cart went light.
His leisure told him that his time was come,
And lack of load made his life burdensome,
That even to his last breath (there be that say't),
As he were pressed to death, he cried, " More weight !"
But, had his doings lasted as they were,
He had been an immortal carrier.
Obedient to the moon he spent his date
In course reciprocal, and had his fate 30
Linked to the mutual flowing of the seas,
Yet (strange to think) his wain was his increase :
His letters are delivered all and gone,
Only remains this superscription.

AN EPITAPH ON THE MARCHIONESS OF WINCHESTER.

THIS rich marble doth inter
 The honoured wife of Winchester,
 A Viscount's daughter, an Earl's heir,
 Besides what her virtues fair
 Added to her noble birth,
 More than she could own from Earth.
 Summers three times eight save one
 She had told ; alas ! too soon,
 After so short time of breath,
 To house with darkness and with death ! 10
 Yet, had the number of her days
 Been as complete as was her praise,
 Nature and Fate had had no strife
 In giving limit to her life.
 Her high birth and her graces sweet
 Quickly found a lover meet ;
 The virgin quire for her request
 The god that sits at marriage-feast ;
 He at their invoking came,
 But with a scarce well-lighted flame ; 20
 And in his garland as he stood,
 Ye might discern a cypress-bud.
 Once had the early matrons run
 To greet her of a lovely son,
 And now with second hope she goes,
 And calls Lucina to her throes ;
 But, whether by mischance or blame,
 Atropos for Lucina came,
 And with remorseless cruelty
 Spoiled at once both fruit and tree : 30
 The hapless babe before his birth
 Had burial, not yet laid in earth
 And the languished mother's womb

Was not long a living tomb.
 So have I seen some tender slip,
 Saved with care from winter's nip,
 The pride of her carnation train,
 Plucked up by some unheedy swain,
 Who only thought to crop the flower
 New shot up from vernal shower ; 40
 But the fair blossom hangs the head
 Sideways as on a dying bed,
 And those pearls of dew she wears
 Prove to be presaging tears
 Which the sad morn had let fall
 On her hastening funeral.
 Gentle Lady, may thy grave
 Peace and quiet ever have !
 After this thy travail sore,
 Sweet rest seize thee evermore, 50
 That, to give the world increase,
 Shortened hast thy own life's lease !
 Here, besides the sorrowing
 That thy noble house doth bring,
 Here be tears of perfect moan
 Weept for thee in Helicon ;
 And some flowers and some bays,
 For thy hearse to strew the ways,
 Sent thee from the banks of Came,
 Devoted to thy virtuous name ; 60
 Whilst thou, bright Saint, high sitt'st in glory,
 Next her, much like to thee in story,
 That fair Syrian shepherdess,
 Who, after years of barrenness,
 The highly-favoured Joseph bore
 To him that served for her before,
 And at her next birth, much like thee,
 Through pangs fled to felicity,
 Far within the bosom bright

Of blazing Majesty and Light :
There with thee, new-welcome Saint,
Like fortunes may her soul acquaint,
With thee there clad in radiant sheen,
No Marchioness, but now a Queen.

ON TIME.

FLY, envious Time, till thou run out thy race :
Call on the lazy leaden-stepping Hours,
Whose speed is but the heavy plummet's pace ;
And glut thyself with what thy womb devours,
Which is no more than what is false and vain,
And merely mortal dross ;
So little is our loss,
So little is thy gain !
For, when as each thing bad thou hast entombed
And, last of all, thy greedy self consumed, 10
Then long Eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss ;
And Joy shall overtake us as a flood,
When every thing that is sincerely good
And perfectly divine,
With Truth, and Peace, and Love shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of Him, t' whose happy-making sight alone
When once our heav'nly-guided soul shall climb,
Then, all this earthly grossness quit 20
Attired with stars we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over Death, and Chance, and thee, O Time !

AT A SOLEMN MUSIC.

BLEST pair of Sirens, pledges of Heaven's joy,
 Sphere-born harmonious Sisters, Voice and Verse,
 Wed your divine sounds, and mixt power employ,
 Dead things with inbreath'd sense able to pierce,
 And to our high-raised phantasy present
 That undisturb'd Song of pure concent
 Aye sung before the sapphire-colour'd throne

To Him that sits thereon,
 With saintly shout and solemn jubilee ;
 Where the bright Seraphim in burning row 10
 Their loud uplifted angel-trumpets blow ;
 And the Cherubic host in thousand quires
 Touch their immortal harps of golden wires,
 With those just Spirits that wear victorious palms,
 Hymns devout and holy psalms
 Singing everlastingly :

That we on Earth with undiscording voice
 May rightly answer that melodious noise ;
 As once we did, till disproportion'd sin
 Jarr'd against nature's chime, and with harsh din 20
 Broke the fair music that all creatures made
 To their great Lord, whose love their motion sway'd
 In perfect diapason, whilst they stood
 In first obedience, and their state of good.
 O may we soon again renew that Song,
 And keep in tune with Heav'n, till God ere long
 To his celestial consort us unite,
 To live with him, and sing in endless morn of light !

L'ALLEGRO.

HENCE, loathed Melancholy,

Of Cerberus and blackest Midnight born
In Stygian cave forlorn

'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy
Find out some uncouth cell,

Where brooding Darkness spreads his jealous wings,
And the night-raven sings ;

There, under ebon shades and low-browed rocks
As ragged as thy locks,

In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell. 10

But come, thou Goddess fair and free,

In heaven yclept Euphrosyne,

And by men heart-easing Mirth ;

Whom lovely Venus, at a birth,

With two sister Graces more,

To ivy-crownèd Bacchus bore :

Or whether (as some sager sing)

The frolic wind that breathes the spring,

Zephyr, with Aurora playing,

As he met her once a-Maying, 20

There, on beds of violet blue,

And fresh-blown roses washed in dew,

Filled her with thee, a daughter fair,

So buxom, blithe, and debonair.

Haste thee, Nymph, and bring with th

 In unreprovèd pleasures free; free

 And, singing, startle the dull night,
 From his watch-tower in the skies,
 Till the dappled dawn doth rise: ma
 Then to come, in spite of sorrow, 5
 And at my window bid good-morrow,
 Through the sweet briar or the vine,
 Or the twisted eglantine;
 While the cock, with lively din,
 Scatters the rear of darkness thin,
 And to the stack, or the barn-door,
Stoutly struts his dames before:
 Oft listening how the hounds and horn
 Cheerly rouse the slumbering morn,
 From the side of some hoar hill, one
 Through the high wood, echoing shrill;
 Sometime walking, not unseen,
 By hedgerow elms, on hillocks green,
 Right against the eastern gate —

 Robed in flames and amber light,
 The clouds in thousand liveries dight;
 While ~~the~~ ploughman, near at hand,
 Whistles o'er the furrowed land,
 And ~~the~~ milkmaid singeth blithe,
 And the mower whets his scythe,
 And every shepherd tells his tale
 Under the hawthorn in the dale.

Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures,
 Whilst the landskip round it measures : 70
 Russet lawns, and fallows gray, plow'd
 Where the nibbling flocks do stray ;
 Mountains on whose barren breast
 The labouring clouds do often rest ; here
 Meadows trim, with daisies pied ; and in Shallow brooks, and rivers wide ;
 Towers and battlements it sees Bosomed high in tufted trees, in branches
 Where perhaps some beauty lies, and 80
 The cynosure of neighbouring eyes.
 Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes
 From betwixt two aged oaks, having
 Where Corydon and Thyrsis met Nam
 Are at their savoury dinner set in Pa
 Of herbs and other country messes, Dish
 Which the neat-handed Phyllis dresses ;
 And then in haste her bower she leaves,
 With Thestylis to bind the sheaves ;
 Or, if the earlier season lead, hay - har
 To the tanned haycock in the mead. 90
 Sometimes, with secure delight, free
 The hural upland hamlets will invite,
 When the merry bells ring round,
 And the merry jocund rebecks sound fiddle
 To many a youth and many a maid
 Dancing in the chequered shade ;
 And young and old come forth to play
 On a sunshine holiday,
 Till the livelong daylight fail : long -
 Then to the spicy nut-brown ale, 100
 With stories told of many a feat,
 How Faery Mab the car-reckers junkets eat x/
 She was pinched and pulled, she said
 And he, by Friar's lantern led,

 His half-regained Eurydice.

Or that starred Ethiop queen that strove
 To set her beauty's praise above
 The Sea-Nymphs, and their powers offended.
 Yet thou art higher far descended :
 Thee bright-haired Vesta long of yore
 To solitary Saturn bore ;

 Most musical, most melancholy !
 Thee, chauntress, oft the woods among

 On the dry smooth-shaven green,
 To behold the wandering moon,
 Riding near her highest noon,

 And bring all heaven before mine eyes.

And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 The hairy gown and mossy cell,
 Where I may sit and rightly spell ,
Of every star that heaven doth shew,
 And every herb that sips the dew ;

 To something like prophetic strain.

These pleasures, Melancholy, give ;
 And I with thee will choose to live.

ARCADES.

Part of an Entertainment presented to the Countess Dowager of Derby at Harefield by some Noble Persons of her Family ; who appear on the Scene in pastoral habit, moving toward the seat of state, with this song :

I. Song.

Look Nymphs, and Shepherds look !
 What sudden blaze of majesty
 Is that which we from hence descry,
 Too divine to be mistook ?

This, this is she
 To whom our vows and wishes bend :
 Here our solemn search hath end.

Fame, that her high worth to raise
 Seemed erst so lavish and profuse,
 We may justly now accuse
 Of detraction from her praise :

Less than half we find expressed ;
 Envy bid conceal the rest.

Mark what radiant state she spreads,
 In circle round her shining throne
 Shooting her beams like silver threads :
 This, this is she alone,
     Sitting like a goddess bright
     In the centre of her light.

Might she the wise Latona be, 20
 Or the towered Cybele,
 Mother of a hundred gods ?
 Juno dares not give her odds :
     Who had thought this clime had held
     A deity so unparalleled ?

As they come forward, THE GENIUS OF THE WOOD appears, and, turning toward them, speaks.

Gen. Stay, gentle Swains, for, though in this disguise,
 I see bright honour sparkle through your eyes ;
 Of famous Arcady ye are, and sprung
 Of that renownèd flood, so often sung,
 Divine Alpheus, who, by secret sluice, 30
 Stole under seas to meet his Arethuse ;
 And ye, the breathing roses of the wood,
 Fair silver-buskin'd Nymphs, as great and good.
 I know this quest of yours and free intent
 Was all in honour and devotion meant
 To the great mistress of yon princely shrine,
 Whom with low reverence I adore as mine,
 And with all helpful service will comply
 To further this night's glad solemnity,
 And lead ye where ye may more near behold 40
 What shallow-searching Fame hath left untold ;
 Which I full oft, amidst these shades alone,

Have sat to wonder at, and gaze upon.
For know, by lot from Jove, I am the Power
Of this fair wood, and live in oaken bower,
To nurse the saplings tall, and curl the grove
With ringlets quaint and wanton windings wove ;
And all my plants I save from nightly ill
Of noisome winds and blasting vapours chill ;
And from the boughs brush off the evil dew, 50
And heal the harms of thwarting thunder blue,
Or what the cross dire-looking planet smites,
Or hurtful worm with cankered venom bites.
When evening gray doth rise, I fetch my round
Over the mount, and all this hallowed ground ;
And early, ere the odorous breath of morn
Awakes the slumbering leaves, or tasselled horn
Shakes the high thicket, haste I all about,
Number my ranks, and visit every sprout
With puissant words and murmurs made to bless. 60
But else, in deep of night, when drowsiness
Hath locked up mortal sense, then listen I
To the celestial Sirens' harmony,
That sit upon the nine infolded spheres,
And sing to those that hold the vital shears,
And turn the adamantine spindle round
On which the fate of gods and men is wound.
Such sweet compulsion doth in music lie,
To lull the daughters of Necessity,
And keep unsteady Nature to her law, 70
And the low world in measured motion draw
After the heavenly tune, which none can hear
Of human mould with gross unpurgèd ear.
And yet such music worthiest were to blaze
The peerless height of her immortal praise
Whose lustre leads us, and for her most fit,
If my inferior hand or voice could hit
Inimitable sounds. Yet, as we go,

Whate'er the skill of lesser gods can show
 I will assay, her worth to celebrate, 80
 And so attend ye toward her glittering state ;
 Where ye may all, that are of noble stem,
 Approach, and kiss her sacred vesture's hem.

II. Song.

O'er the smooth enamelled green,
 Where no print of step hath been,
     Follow me, as I sing
     And touch the warbled string ;
 Under the shady roof
 Of branching elm star-proof
     Follow me. 90
 I will bring you where she sits,
 Clad in splendour as befits
     Her deity.
 Such a rural Queen
 All Arcadia hath not seen.

III. Song.

Nymphs and Shepherds, dance no more
     By sandy Ladon's liliated banks ;
 On old Lycæus, or Cyllene hoar,
     Trip no more in twilight ranks ;
 Though Erymanth your loss deplore, 100
     A better soil shall give ye thanks.
 From the stony Mænalus
 Bring your flocks, and live with us ;
 Here ye shall have greater grace,
 To serve the Lady of this place.
 Though Syrinx your Pan's mistress were,
 Yet Syrinx well might wait on her.
     Such a rural Queen
 All Arcadia hath not seen.

LYCIDAS.

In this Monody the Author bewails a learned Friend, unfortunately drowned in his passage from Chester on the Irish Seas, 1637; and, by occasion, foretells the ruin of our corrupted Clergy, then in their height.

YET once more, O ye laurels, and once more,
 Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere,
 I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
 And with forced fingers rude
 Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year.
 Bitter constraint and sad occasion dear
 Compels me to disturb your season due ;
 For Lycidas is dead, dead ere his prime,
 Young Lycidas, and hath not left his peer.
 Who would not sing for Lycidas ? he knew 10
 Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
 He must not float upon his watery bier
 Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
 Without the meed of some melodious tear.

Begin, then, Sisters of the sacred well
 That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring ;
 Begin, and somewhat loudly sweep the string.
 Hence with denial vain and coy excuse :
 So may some gentle Muse
 With lucky words favour my destined urn, 20
 And as he passes turn,
 And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud.
 For we were nursed upon the self-same hill,
 Fed the same flock, by fountain, shade, and rill.

Together both, ere the high lawns appeared
 Under the opening eyelids of the Morn,
 We drove a-field, and both together heard
 What time the gray-fly winds her sultry horn,
~~Battering~~ our flocks with the fresh dews of night,
 Oft till the star that rose at evening bright 30

Toward heaven's descent had sloped his westering wheel.
 Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute,
 Tempered to the oaten flute ;
 Rough Satyrs danced, and Fauns with cloven heel
 From the glad sound would not be absent long ;
 And old Damœtas loved to hear our song.

But, oh ! the heavy change, now thou art gone,
 Now thou art gone and never must return !
 Thee, Shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,
 With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown, 40
 And all their echoes, mourn.
 The willows, and the hazel copses green,
 Shall now no more be seen
 Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lays.
 As killing as the canker to the rose,
 Or taint-worm to the weanling herds that graze,
 Or frost to flowers, that their gay wardrobe wear,
 When first the white-thorn blows ;
 Such, Lycidas, thy loss to shepherd's ear.

Where were ye, Nymphs, when the remorseless deep 50
 Closed o'er the head of your loved Lycidas ?
 For neither were ye playing on the steep
 Where your old bards, the famous Druids, lie,
 Nor on the shaggy top of Mona high,
 Nor yet where Deva spreads her wizard stream.
 Ay me ! I fondly dream
 "Had ye been there," . . . for what could that have done
 What could the Muse herself that Orpheus bore,
 The Muse herself, for her enchanting son,
 Whom universal nature did lament, 60
 When, by the rout that made the hideous roar,
 His gory visage down the stream was sent,
 Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore ?

Alas ! what boots it with uncessant care
 To tend the homely, slighted, shepherd's trade.
 And strictly meditate the thankless Muse ?

Were it not better done, as others use,
 To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
 Or with the tangles of Neæra's hair ?
 Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise 70
 (That last infirmity of noble mind)
 To scorn delights and live laborious days ;
 But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
~~And think to burst out into sudden blaze,~~
 Comes the blind Fury with the abhorred shears,
 And slits the thin-spun life. " But not the praise."
 Phœbus replied, and touched my trembling ears :
 " Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
 Nor in the glistering foil
 Set off to the world, nor in broad rumour lies, 80
 But lives and spreads aloft by those pure eyes
 And perfect witness of all-judging Jove ;
 As he pronounces lastly on each deed,
 Of so much fame in heaven expect thy meed."
 O fountain Arethuse, and thou honoured flood,
 Smooth-sliding Mincius, crowned with vocal reeds,
 That strain I heard was of a higher mood.
 But now my oat proceeds,
 And listens to the herald of the sea,
 That came in Neptune's plea. 90
 He asked the waves, and asked the felon winds,
 What hard mishap hath doomed this gentle swain ?
 And questioned every gust of rugged wings
 That blows off from each beakèd promontory.
 They knew not of his story ;
 And sage Hippotadès their answer brings,
 That not a blast was from his dungeon strayed :
 The air was calm, and on the level brine
 Sleek Panopè with all her sisters played.
 It was that fatal and perfidious bark, 100
 Built in the eclipse, and rigged with curses dark,
 That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.

Next, Camus, reverend sire, went footing slow,
 His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge,
 Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
 Like to that sanguine flower inscribed with woe.
"Ah! who hath reft," quoth he, "my dearest pledge?"

Last came, and last did go,

The Pilot of the Galilean Lake;

Two massy keys he bore of metals twain 110

(The golden opes, the iron shuts amain);

He shook his mitred locks, and stern bespake:—

"How well could I have spared for thee, young swain, Enow of such as, for their bellies' sake,
 Creep, and intrude, and climb into the fold. — Church
Of other care they little reckoning make
Than how to scramble at the shearers' feast, Church
And shove away the worthy bidden guest. — Conscience

Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold
 A sheep-hook, or have learnt aught else the least 120

That to the faithful herdman's art belongs!

What recks it them? What need they? They are sped:

And, when they list, their lean and flashy songs

Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw;

The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,

But, swoln with wind and the rank mist they draw,

Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread;

Besides what the grim wolf with privy paw

Daily devours apace, and nothing said.

But that two-handed engine at the door 130

Stands ready to smite once, and smite no more."

Return, Alpheus; the dread voice is past
 That shrunk thy streams; return Sicilian Muse,
 And call the vales, and bid them hither cast
 Their bells, and flowerets of a thousand hues.
 Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use
 Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks,
 On whose fresh lap the swart star sparely looks,

Throw hither all your quaint enamelled eyes,
 That on the green turf suck the honeyed showers, 140
 And purple all the ground with vernal flowers.
 Bring the rathe primrose that forsaken dies,
 The tufted crow-toe, and pale jessamine,
 The white pink, and the pansy freaked with jet,
 The glowing violet,
 The musk-rose, and the well-attired woodbine,
 With cowslips wan that hang the pensive head,
 And every flower that sad embroidery wears ;
 Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
 And daffadillies fill their cups with tears, 150
 To strew the laureate hearse where Lycid lies.
 For so, to interpose a little ease,
 Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise,
 Ay me ! whilst thee the shores and sounding seas
 Wash far away, where'er thy bones are hurled ;
 Whether beyond the stormy Hebrides,
 Where thou perhaps under the whelming tide
 Visit'st the bottom of the monstrous world ;
 Or whether thou, to our moist vows denied,
 Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old, 160
 Where the great Vision of the guarded mount Looks towards Namancos and Bayona's hold.
 Look homeward, Angel, now, and melt with ruth :
 And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth.

Weep no more, woful shepherds, weep no more,
 For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead,
 Sunk though he be beneath the watery floor.
 So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
 And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
 And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled ore 170
 Flames in the forehead of the morning sky :
 So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high,
 Through the dear might of Him that walked the waves,
 Where, other groves and other streams along,

With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,
 And hears the unexpressive nuptial song,
 In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love.
 There entertain him all the Saints above,
 In solemn troops, and sweet societies,
 That sing, and singing in their glory move, 180
 And wipe the tears for ever from his eyes.
 Now, Lycidas, the shepherds weep no more ;
 Henceforth thou art the Genius of the shore,
 In thy large recompense, and shalt be good
 To all that wander in that perilous flood.

Thus sang the uncouth swain to the oaks and rills,
 While the still morn went out with sandals gray :
 He touched the tender stops of various quills,
 With eager thought warbling his Doric lay :
 And now the sun had stretched out all the hills, 190
 And now was dropt into the western bay ;
 At last he rose, and twitched his mantle blue :
 To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new.

SONNETS.

I.

[TO THE NIGHTINGALE.]

O NIGHTINGALE, that on yon bloomy spray
     Warbl'st at eve, when all the woods are still,
     Thou with fresh hope the lover's heart dost fill,
     While the jolly hours lead on propitious May.
 Thy liquid notes that close the eye of day,
     First heard before the shallow cuckoo's bill,
     Portend success in love. O, if Jove's will Have linked that amorous power to thy soft lay,

Now timely sing, ere the rude bird of hate
 Foretell my hopeless doom in some grove nigh ;      10
 As thou from year to year hast sung too late
 For my relief ; yet hadst no reason why,
 Whether the Muse or Love call thee his mate,
 Both them I serve, and of their train am I.

II.

[ON HIS HAVING ARRIVED AT THE AGE OF TWENTY-THREE.]

How soon hath Time, the subtle thief of youth,
 Stolen on his wing my three-and-twentieth year !
 My hasting days fly on with full career,
 But my late spring no bud or blossom shew'th.
 Perhaps my semblance might deceive the truth,
 That I to manhood am arrived so near ;
 And inward ripeness doth much less appear,
 That some more timely-happy spirits endu'th.
 Yet, be it less or more, or soon or slow,
 It shall be still in strictest measure even      10
 To that same lot, however mean or high,
 Toward which Time leads me, and the will of Heaven ;
 All is, if I have grace to use it so,
 As ever in my great Task-Master's eye.

VIII.

WHEN THE ASSAULT WAS INTENDED TO THE CITY.

'CAPTAIN or Colonel, or Knight in Arms,
 Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,
 If ever deed of honour did thee please,
 Guard them, and him within protect from harms.
 He can requite thee ; for he knows the charms
 That call fame on such gentle acts as these,

And he can spread thy name o'er lands and seas,
 Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms.
 Lift not thy spear against the Muses' bower :
 The great Emathian conqueror bid spare 10
 The house of Pindarus, when temple and tower
 Went to the ground ; and the repeated air
 Of sad Electra's poet had the power
 To save th' Athenian walls from ruin bare.

IX.

[TO A VIRTUOUS YOUNG LADY.]

LADY, that in the prime of earliest youth
 Wisely hast shunned the broad way and the green,
 And with those few art eminently seen
 That labour up the hill of heavenly Truth,
 The better part with Mary and with Ruth
 Chosen thou hast ; and they that overween,
 And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
 No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth.
 Thy care is fixed, and zealously attends
 To fill thy odorous lamp with deeds of light, 10
 And hope that reaps not shame. Therefore be sure Thou, when the Bridegroom with his feastful friends
 Passes to bliss at the mid-hour of night,
 Hast gained thy entrance, Virgin wise and pure.

X.

TO THE LADY MARGARET LEY.

DAUGHTER to that good Earl, once President
 Of England's Council and her Treasury,
 Who lived in both unstained with gold or fee,
 And left them both, more in himself content,
 Till the sad breaking of that Parliament

Broke him, as that dishonest victory
 At Chæronéa, fatal to liberty,
 Killed with report that old man eloquent,
 Though later born than to have known the days
 Wherein your father flourished, yet by you, 10
 Madam, methinks I see him living yet :
 So well your words his noble virtues praise
 That all both judge you to relate them true
 And to possess them, honoured Margaret.

XI.

ON THE DETRACTION WHICH FOLLOWED UPON MY WRITING CERTAIN TREATISES.

A BOOK was writ of late called Tetrachordon,
 And woven close, both matter, form, and style;
 The subject new: it walked the town awhile,
 Numbering good intellects; now seldom pored on.
 Cries the stall-reader, "Bless us! what a word on A title-page is this!"; and some in file
 Stand spelling false, while one might walk to Mile-End Green. Why, is it harder, sirs, than Gordon,
Colkitto, or Macdonnel, or Galasp? 9
 Those rugged names to our like mouths grow sleek
 That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp.
 Thy age, like ours, O soul of Sir John Cheek,
 Hated not learning worse than toad or asp,
 When thou taught'st Cambridge and King Edward Greek.

XII.

ON THE SAME.

I DID but prompt the age to quit their clogs
 By the known rules of ancient liberty,
 When straight a barbarous noise environs me

Of owls and cuckoos, asses, apes, and dogs ;
 As when those hinds that were transformed to frogs
     Railed at Latona's twin-born progeny,
     Which after held the Sun and Moon in fee.
 But this is got by casting pearl to hogs,
 That bawl for freedom in their senseless mood,
 And still revolt when Truth would set them free. 10
 Licence they mean when they cry Liberty ;
 For who loves that must first be wise and good :
 But from that mark how far they rove we see,
 For all this waste of wealth and loss of blood.

XIIa.

ON THE NEW FORCERS OF CONSCIENCE UNDER THE LONG PARLIAMENT.

BECAUSE you have thrown off your Prelate Lord,
 And with stiff vows renounced his Liturgy,
 To seize the widowed whore Plurality
 From them whose sin ye envied, not abhorred,
 Dare ye for this adjure the civil sword
 To force our consciences that Christ set free,
 And ride us with a Classic Hierarchy,
 Taught ye by mere A. S. and Rutherford ?
 Men whose life, learning, faith, and pure intent,
 Would have been held in high esteem with Paul 10
 Must now be named and printed heretics
 By shallow Edwards and Scotch What-d'ye-call !
 But we do hope to find out all your tricks,
 Your plots and packing worse than those of Trent,
     That so the Parliament
 May with their wholesome and preventive shears
 Clip your phylacteries, though baulk your ears,
     And succour our just fears,
 When they shall read this clearly in your charge :—
 New Presbyter is but old Priest writ large. 20

XIII.

TO MR. H. LAWES, ON HIS AIRS.

HARRY, whose tuneful and well-measured song
 First taught our English music how to span
 Words with just note and accent, not to scan
 With Midas' ears, committing short and long,
 Thy worth and skill exempts thee from the throng,
 With praise enough for Envy to look wan;
 To after age thou shalt be writ the man
 That with smooth air couldst humour best our tongue.
 Thou honour'st Verse, and Verse must lend her wing
 To honour thee, the priest of Phœbus' quire, 10
 That tunest their happiest lines in hymn or story.
 Dante shall give Fame leave to set thee higher Than his Casella, whom he wooed to sing,
 Met in the milder shades of Purgatory.

XIV.

ON THE RELIGIOUS MEMORY OF MRS. CATHERINE THOMASON,
 MY CHRISTIAN FRIEND, DECEASED DECEMBER, 1646.

WHEN Faith and Love, which parted from thee never,
 Had ripened thy just soul to dwell with God,
 Meekly thou didst resign this earthly load
 Of death, called life, which us from life doth sever.
 Thy Works, and Alms, and all thy good Endeavour,
 Stayed not behind, nor in the grave were trod;
 But, as Faith pointed with her golden rod,
 Followed thee up to joy and bliss for ever.
 Love led them on; and Faith, who knew them best
 Thy handmaids, clad them o'er with purple beams 10
 And azure wings, that up they flew so drest,
 And speak the truth of thee on glorious themes
 Before the Judge; who thenceforth bid thee rest,
 And drink thy fill of pure immortal streams.

XV.

ON THE LORD GENERAL FAIRFAX, AT THE SIEGE OF COLCHESTER.

FAIRFAX, whose name in arms through Europe rings,
 Filling each mouth with envy or with praise,
 And all her jealous monarchs with amaze,
 And rumours loud that daunt remotest kings,
 Thy firm unshaken virtue ever brings Victory home, though new rebellions raise
 Their Hydra heads, and the false North displays
 Her broken league, to imp their serpent wings.
 O yet a nobler task awaits thy hand,
 (For what can war but endless war still breed ?) 10
 Till truth and right from violence be freed,
 And public faith cleared from the shameful brand
 Of public fraud. In vain doth Valour bleed
 While Avarice and Rapine share the land.

XVI.

TO THE LORD GENERAL CROMWELL, MAY 1652,
 ON THE PROPOSALS OF CERTAIN MINISTERS AT THE COMMITTEE FOR PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL.

CROMWELL, our chief of men, who through a cloud
 Not of war only, but detractions rude,
 Guided by faith and matchless fortitude,
 To peace and truth thy glorious way hast ploughed,
 And on the neck of crownèd Fortune proud
 Hast reared God's trophies, and his work pursued,
 While Darwen stream, with blood of Scots imbrued,
 And Dunbar field resounds thy praises loud,
 And Worcester's laureate wreath : yet much remains
 To conquer still ; Peace hath her victories 10
 No less renowned than War : new foes arise,

Threatening to bind our souls with secular chains :
Help us to save free conscience from the paw
Of hireling wolves, whose Gospel is their maw.

XVII.

TO SIR HENRY VANE THE YOUNGER.

VANE, young in years, but in sage counsel old,
Than whom a better senator ne'er held
The helm of Rome, when gowns, not arms, repelled
The fierce Epirot and the African bold,
Whether to settle peace, or to unfold
The drift of hollow states, hard to be spelled ;
Then to advise how war may best upheld
Move by her two main nerves, iron and gold,
In all her equipage ; besides to know
Both spiritual power and civil, what each means, 10
What severs each, thou hast learned, which few have done.
The bounds of either sword to thee we owe :
Therefore on thy firm hand Religion leans
In peace, and reckons thee her eldest son.

XVIII.

ON THE LATE MASSACRE IN PIEDMONT.

AVENGE, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints, whose bones
Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains cold,
Even them who kept thy truth so pure of old,
When all our fathers worshipt stocks and stones,
Forget not : in thy book record their groans
Who were thy sheep and in their ancient fold
Slain by the bloody Piemontese that rolled Mother with infant down the rocks. Their moans
The vales redoubled to the hills, and they

To heaven. Their martyred blood and ashes sow 10
 O'er all th' Italian fields where still doth sway
 The triple Tyrant ; that from these may grow
 A hundredfold, who, having learnt thy way,
 Early may fly the Babylonian woe.

[ON HIS BLINDNESS.]

WHEN I consider how my light is spent
 Ere half my days in this dark world and wide,
 And that one talent which is death to hide
 Lodged with me useless, though my soul more bent
 To serve therewith my Maker, and present
 My true account, lest He returning chide,
 "Doth God exact day-labour, light denied?"
 I fondly ask. But Patience, to prevent
 That murmur, soon replies, "God doth not need
 Either man's work or his own gifts. Who best 10
 Bear his mild yoke, they serve him best. His state
 Is kingly : thousands at his bidding speed,
 And post o'er land and ocean without rest ;
 They also serve who only stand and wait."

XX.

[TO MR. LAWRENCE.]

LAWRENCE, of virtuous father virtuous son,
 Now that the fields are dank, and ways are mire,
 Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire
 Help waste a sullen day, what may be won
 From the hard season gaining? Time will run
 On smoother, till Favonius reinspire
 The frozen earth, and clothe in fresh attire
 The lily and rose, that neither sowed nor spun.

What neat repast shall feast us, light and choice,
Of Attic taste, with wine, whence we may rise      10
To hear the lute well touched, or artful voice
Warble immortal notes and Tuscan air?
He who of those delights can judge, and spare
To interpose them oft, is not unwise.

XXI.

[TO CYRIACK SKINNER.]

CYRIACK, whose grandsire on the royal bench
Of British Themis, with no mean applause,
Pronounced, and in his volumes taught, our laws,
Which others at their bar so often wrench,
To-day deep thoughts resolve with me to drench
In mirth that after no repenting draws;
Let Euclid rest, and Archimedes pause,
And what the Swede intend, and what the French.
To measure life learn thou betimes, and know
Toward solid good what leads the nearest way;      10
For other things mild Heaven a time ordains,
And disapproves that care, though wise in show,
That with superfluous burden loads the day,
And, when God sends a cheerful hour, refrains.

[TO THE SAME.]

CYRIACK, this three years' day these eyes, though clear,
To outward view, of blemish or of spot,
Bereft of light their seeing have forgot;
Nor to their idle orbs doth sight appear
Of sun, or moon, or star, throughout the year,
Or man, or woman. Yet I argue not Against Heaven's hand or will, nor bate a jot.

Of heart or hope, but still bear up and steer
 Right onward. What supports me, dost thou ask ?
 The conscience, friend, to have lost them overplied 10
 In Liberty's defence, my noble task,
 Of which all Europe talks from side to side.
 This thought might lead me through the world's vain mask
 Content, though blind, had I no better guide.

[TO THE MEMORY OF HIS SECOND WIFE.]

METHOUGHT I saw my late espoused saint
 Brought to me like Alcestis from the grave,
 Whom Jove's great son to her glad husband gave,
 Rescued from Death by force, though pale and faint.
 Mine, as whom washed from spot of child-bed taint
 Purification in the Old Law did save,
 And such as yet once more I trust to have Full sight of her in Heaven without restraint,
 Came vested all in white, pure as her mind.
 Her face was veiled ; yet to my fancied sight 10
 Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shined
 So clear as in no face with more delight
 But, oh ! as to embrace me she inclined,
 I waked, she fled, and day brought back my night.

NOTES

ON THE MORNING OF CHRIST'S NATIVITY.

This Ode was begun very early in the morning of Christmas Day, 1629, when Milton had lately passed his twenty-first year, and was in his sixth academic year at Cambridge. In his sixth elegy, addressed to his friend Charles Diodati, the poet thus alludes to the composition of the Ode :

“Wouldst thou (perhaps 'tis hardly worth thine ear),
Wouldst thou be told my occupation here ?
The promised king of peace employs my pen,
The eternal covenant made for guilty men,
The new-born deity with infant cries
Filling the sordid hovel where he lies ;
The hymning angels, and the herald star,
That lead the wise, who sought him from afar,
And idols on their own unhallowed shore,
Dashed, at his birth, to be revered no more,
This theme, on reeds of Albion I rehearse,
The dawn of that blest day inspired the verse ; ” etc.
(Cowper's Translation).

In the previous year he had addressed his native language in a Vacation Exercise and expressed his wish to find a subject suited to his muse and to the capabilities of the language—the “ reeds of Albion : ”

“ Yet had I rather, if I were to choose,
Thy service in some graver subject use,
Such as may make thee search thy coffers round,
Before thou clothe my fancy in fit sound :
Such where the deep transported mind may soar
Above the wheeling poles, and at Heaven's door
Look in. ”

Christ's nativity was that ‘ graver subject,’ which suited the character of his muse so well that the result was what Hallam considered to be perhaps the finest ode in the English language. “ A grandeur, a simplicity, a breadth of manner, an imagination at once elevated and restrained by the subject, reign throughout it. If Pindar is a model of lyric poetry, it would be hard to name any other ode so truly Pindaric ; but more has naturally been derived from the Scriptures.” This mixture of classical and Biblical influences is illustrated in the accompanying notes ; the key-note of the poem is struck when Nature, with all the religions of antiquity, is treated as guilty—as representing a fallen world which is to be redeemed by “ the mighty Pan.”

I. Introduction.

1. Occasion of the poem :
  - (a) Time and Purpose of the Nativity, - lines 1-7
  - (b) The manner of it, - - - - 8-14
2. Poet's address to his Muse :

The Wise Men of the East come to worship Christ, angels praise him, and hast thou no offering ? - - - - - 15-28

II. The Hymn.

1. Guilty Nature fears his coming, - - - 29-44
2. But Peace is his harbinger, - - - 45-52

  - (c) Its accompaniments, - - - 109-116
  - (d) Such music never before heard, except at the Creation of the Universe, - 117-124

(There is here a skilful transition from the heavenly music to the thought of "the music of the spheres.")

  - (a) The Age of Gold would return.

In 1630 Milton wrote a fragment on The Passion, in the opening stanza of which he thus alludes to the Nativity Ode :

“ Erewhile of music, and ethereal mirth,
Wherewith the stage of Air and Earth did ring,
And joyous news of Heavenly Infant’s birth,
My muse with Angels did divide to sing.”

From this poem and from the lines Upon the Circumcision it has been thought that the poet intended to write a series of Odes on the great festivals of the Christian Church. The reason he gives for having failed to complete that on The Passion is as follows : “ This subject the author finding to be above the years he had when he wrote it, and nothing satisfied with what was begun, left it unfinished.”

THE VERSE.

The Introduction consists of four stanzas of seven lines—the first six decasyllabic (5 x a), the seventh an Alexandrine (6 x a). The same stanza had already been used by Milton in his poem On the Death of a Fair Infant (1626), and it is similar to that in which Spenser wrote his Four Hymns, Ruins of Time, etc., and Shakespeare his Lucrece. But Spenser’s form is decasyllabic throughout, the break between the stanzas being therefore less distinctly marked than in Milton’s poem. The rhyme formula, however, is the same in both, viz. a b a b b c c. The earlier form was used by Chaucer, (see Clerk’s Tale, Troilus and Cresseide, etc.), and was the favourite measure of the English poets down to the time of Queen Elizabeth ; but it cannot be positively asserted that Chaucer invented it, as it is said to have been used prior to his time by the French poet Machault. In his essay on the language and versification of Chaucer, Tyrwhitt states that “ in the time of Gascoigne it had acquired the name of rhythme royall’ or [‘ Rhyme Royal’] ; ‘ and surely,’ says he, ‘ it is a royall kinde of verse, serving best for grave discourses.’ ” It will be noted that by the arrangement of the rhymes the stanza is made to turn, as on a pivot, on the fourth line, which has three lines on each side of it : this line is “ the last of a quatrain of alternate rhymes and first of a quatrain of couplets ” ; thus—

$$\overbrace{a \ b \ a \ b \ b \ c \ c}$$

This stanza is evidently adapted from an eight-lined decasyllabic stave ; it is, in fact, a modification of the ottava rima of the Italians (in which Boccaccio, Tasso and Ariosto wrote), the rhyme formula of which was a b a b a b c c. By the excision of the fifth line we get the seven-line stanza of Chaucer and early

French poetry, and if the last line be changed into an Alexandrine we get the introductory stanza of Milton's Ode. It is interesting to compare this with the stanza—usually known as “the Spenserian stanza”—of the Faerie Queene, which has nine lines, the last being an Alexandrine. This was evolved out of another eight-line stanza (used by Chaucer in his Monk's Tale), very different in structure from that referred to above, the rhyme formula being a b a b b c b c. Spenser added an Alexandrine, the rhymes being a b a b b c b c. It will be seen, therefore, that, looking only to metrical structure, Milton's introductory stanzas correspond to the stanza of the Faerie Queene with the sixth and seventh lines omitted, or to that of the Four Hymns with the last line changed into an Alexandrine.

The remainder of the poem, i.e. the Ode proper, is in eight-lined stanzas, the structure of which may be thus indicated :

No. of line	(1).	(2).	(3).	(4).	(5).	(6).	(7).	(8).
No. of feet	3.	3.	5.	3.	3.	5.	4.	6.
Rhymes	a.	a.	b.	c.	c.	b.	d.	d.

Wherever in lines (3) and (6) the final syllable is -ing, that syllable is supernumerary ; see the third stanza of the Ode proper for an example. And “as an Alexandrine itself is susceptible of internal trisyllabic variation as well as disyllabic, and as it may also have a supernumerary final syllable ... we may have Alexandrines of thirteen syllables” : this remark of Professor Masson's is illustrated by lines 140 and 244.

1. the month. See above, on the date of the composition of the Ode.

2. Wherein, on which. Modern prose usage requires in with reference to space of time (‘the month in which’) and on with reference to a point of time (‘the morning on which’). In the latter case in was once common, but the change to the use of on took place as early as the sixteenth century : comp. Wicliffe, Acts, xiii. 14, “In the day of Sabbath,” and see Abbott's Shakespearean Grammar, § 161.

Heaven's Eternal King. Comp. Par. Reg. i. 236 : “Thy Father is the Eternal King who rules All Heaven and Earth.”

3. virgin mother : comp. Andrewes' 9th Sermon on the Nativity, ‘And where they (i.e. faith and reason) meet, they make no less a miracle than Mater and Virgo, or Deus and Homo.’ Crashaw calls the Virgin Mary ‘maiden wife and maiden mother too.’

4. redemption, ransom, buying back. Ransom is the same word through the French, disguised by the difference of vowel-sound and of the final letter (Fr. rançon : in Ancren Riwe spelt raunsun). Comp. P. L. xii. 422 : " Ere the third dawning light Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise, The ransom paid, which man from death redeems, His death for man " : also Gal. iv. 4.

5. holy sages ... sing : comp. L'Alleg. 17 and note. The sages referred to are the Old Testament writers.

6. deadly forfeit, the penalty of death. 'Forfeit,' that which is imposed as a punishment, and hence the punishment itself : comp. Sams. Agon. 508, " And let another hand, not thine, exact Thy penal forfeit from thyself." The word is radically a participle (comp. 'perfect,' etc.), and is from Low Latin forisfactum, a trespass, something done amiss or beyond limits (foris, out of doors, seen in the word foreign ; and facere, to do).

release, remit, secure the remission of. Compare M. for M. v. l. 525, " Thy slanders I forgive, and therewithal Remit thy other forfeits." 'Release' (and its doublet relax) were once frequent in this somewhat technical sense : comp. " The king made a great feast, ... and he made a release to the provinces," Esther, ii. 18 ; " The statute of mortmain was at several times relaxed by the legislature " (Swift) ; the word has still this legal sense : " Releases are a discharge or conveyance of a man's right in lands," etc. (Blackstone's Commentaries).

7. with. As the Father demands the penalty, the Son has to covenant with Him : see Par. Lost, iii. 144, 227. So that 'with' here denotes not 'along with,' but is used as in the phrase, " I will use my interest with him " : comp. Lat. apud or inter.

work us, i.e. bring about on our behalf. Comp. Par. Lost, i. 642, " wrought our fall " ; ib. iv. 48, " Yet all his good proved ill in me, And wrought but malice."

peace. Comp. Isaiah, ix. 6, " the Prince of Peace " ; also Luke, ii. 14, and Andrewes' 13th Sermon, " Ipse est Pax nostra " (Eph. ii. 14).

8. unsufferable. We now say 'insufferable' : see notes on uncessant,' Lycidas, 64 ; and 'unexpressive,' Lyc. 176.

9. far-beaming blaze. Comp. Par. Lost, iii. 1-6 :

" Hail, holy Light ! offspring of Heaven first-born !
Or of the Eternal co-eternal beam
May I express thee unblamed ? since God is light,
And never but in unapproached light
Dwelt from eternity, dwelt then in thee,
Bright effluence of bright essence increate."

Beam is here intransitive, but in South's Sermons, i. 8, we find

"God beams this light into man's understanding." The phrase 'blaze of majesty' occurs again in Arcades, 2.

10. wont, used, was accustomed. See notes, Lyc. 67 and Il. Pens. 37.

11. sit the midst: comp. Par. Lost, iii. 62. 'The midst' may here be used attributively = midmost (comp. Par. Lost, v. 165, "Him first, Him least, Him midst"); but more probably = in the midst, as the omission of the preposition in adverbial phrases was common in Eliz. English: see Abbott, § 202. 'Midst' occurs twelve times in Shakespeare as a substantive = the middle, 'in the midst' being a corruption of 'in midstest,' found in Spenser (F. Q. vi. 3. 25), which again is from M. E. in middes, derived from A.S. a midde or on-midden. See further in note on L'Alleg. 4. On the origin of such peculiar phrases as 'in our midst,' 'in their midst,' see Marsh's Lect. on Eng. Lang. xviii.

Trinal Unity. Comp. Andrewes' 13th Sermon: "Being Ode natalitia, if we consider it as a nativity, they that calculate or cast nativities in their calculations stand much upon triplicities and trigons and trine aspects"; also Spenser's Hymn of Heavenly Love, 64, "trinal triplicities."

12. to be, in order to be

14. darksome house. Comp. Il. Pens. 92 and note, "Her mansion in this fleshly nook": also the Platonic doctrine that the body is the soul's prison (Phaedo, vi.), and Virgil's Æn. vi. 734, Clausae tenebris et carcere caeco, "(Souls) shut up in darkness and a blind prison." Many adjectives ending in -some are now obsolete; on this point see Trench's English Past and Present, v.; -some is the A.S. and early English sum, German sam: and reappears as an independent word in same. Trench gives a list: wansum, lovesum, healthsome, heedsome, etc.

mortal clay. On Milton's uses of 'mortal' see Lyc. 78, note. Locke calls the body "the clay cottage," and Byron has "the clay-cold bonds which round our being cling," Childe H. P. iii. 73.

15. vein, strain, mood. The figurative uses of this word are remarkable. Comp. Rich. III. iv. 2, 'the giving vein'; satirical vein; vein of metal; improve my vein (i.e. natural disposition).

16. Afford a present, bestow or yield a gift. There is no reference here to the power or resources of his muse; 'to afford' in the 17th century was frequent in the sense of 'to give of what one has,' a sense surviving in such phrases as "the food which the country affords": comp. Sams. Agon. 910, "Afford me place"; Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 16; Hen. VIII. i. 4. 17; etc.

17. strain: see note, Il Pens. 174. In the edition of 1645 it is spelt stresin (Fr. estreindre, to stretch or press).

19. while the heaven, etc. For allusions to the horses of the Sun comp. Shakespeare, 1 Hen. iv. "heavenly-harnessed team," and Rich. III. v. 3.: in the Faithful Shepherdess Fletcher speaks of night's "lazy team." "The horses and chariot with which Helios traverses the heavens are not mentioned in the Iliad and Odyssey, but first occur in the Homeric hymn on Helios, and both are described minutely by later poets" (Smith's Classical Dict.). untrod: comp. L'Alleg. 131.

20. took: a form of the past tense used as a past participle. Shakespeare has took for 'taken,' shaked and shook for 'shaken,' arose for 'arisen,' etc. Comp. Il. Pens. 91, 'forsook'; Lines on Shak. 12, 'hath took'; Arcades, 4, 'to be mistook'; Comus, 558, 'was took,' etc. print: comp. Arc. 85, 'print of step'; Comus, 897, 'printless feet.'

21. spangled host keep watch. On the watchfulness of the stars comp. Comus, 112, "the starry quire Who, in their nightly watchful spheres," etc.: comp. also Comus, 1003, "far above in spangled sheen," and Addison's well-known lines,

"The spacious firmament on high,
With all the blue ethereal sky,
And spangled heavens, a shining frame,
Their great Original proclaim."

See note on Lycidas, 170, "new-spangled sheen."

23. star-led wizards. Comp. St. Matt. ii. 2, and marginal reference: also Par. Reg. i. 249. "A star ... Guided the wise men thither from the East." 'Wizards' = wise men: there is no reference to magical powers. Comp. F. Q. iv. 12. 2, where the ancient philosophers are called "antique wizards"; also Lyc. 55, "Deva's wizard stream," and note; also Comus, 571, 872.

24. prevent, anticipate, forestall. See the Bible Concordance and Trench's Select Glossary, where this, the radical sense of the word (Lat. pre-venio, to come before) is illustrated. Comp. Comus, 285, "Perhaps forestalling night prevented them," where the word seems to have something of both earlier and later meanings; Par. Lost, vi. 129, "At this prevention more incensed"; ib. ii. 467, iii. 231.

ode: a Greek word meaning a song.

25. lowly: used adverbially. Comp. Par. Lost, viii. 173, "Be lowly wise"; All's Well, ii. 2, "I will show myself highly fed and lowly taught."

27. the angel quire. See note, Il. Pens. 162, and comp. Par. Reg. i. 242, "At thy nativity a glorious choir of angels ... sung."

28. secret altar, etc. An allusion, as Newton points out, to Isaiah, vi. 6. 7, "Then flew one of the seraphim unto me, having a live coal ... from off the altar; and he touched my mouth with it, and said, Lo,... thine iniquity is taken away." Comp. also a passage in Milton's Reason of Church Government (1641), "that eternal spirit who can enrich with all utterance and knowledge, and sends out His seraphim with the hallowed fire of His altar, to touch and purify the lips of whom He pleases." 'Secret': for this use of 'secret' in the sense of 'set apart' comp. Par. Lost, i. 6, "Secret top of Oreb"; Milton has 'separate' in the same sense in Sams. Agon. 31.

30. While. See Abbott, § 137. "While now means only during the time when," but in Eliz. English both while and whiles meant 'up to the time when.'" In line 19 while denotes a space of time, and here a point of time. This line is metrically irregular; it may be scanned, 'While | the heav'n | born Child'; comp. line 104.

31. All. See note, Il. Pens. 33.

32. in awe to him, i.e. standing in awe of him. This use of to instead of of is explained by the grammatical development of the phrase. At first of usually preceded the object, and to the subject of the feeling: 'Awe of me stood to man.' This was varied by 'Awe to (or with) me stood men,' men being a dative. When this dative was mistaken for a nominative, the phrase became 'Men stood awe of me,' and finally 'Men stood in awe of me.' Comp. Layamon, 11,694, "Him ne stod aei<sup>e</sup> to nathing" (1205), which in the edition of 1250 becomes, "Him ne stod eye of no thing."

33. doff'd, put off. Doff is a contraction of 'do off,' as don of 'do on,' and dup (to undo a door) of 'do up': comp. Nares' Glossary on dout=do out.

gaudy trim, holiday attire. This is not the 'gaudy' of Il Penseroso, 6 (=showy), but of 'gaudy-day' (=festival) in Tennyson's Enid: comp. Ant. and Cleop. iii. 13. 182, "Let's have another gaudy-night" (Lat. gaudium, gladness).

34. so, thereby.

35. no season, unseasonable, out of place.

lusty paramour: see note, Lyc. 123, 'Paramour,' lover, is the French par amour, by love, an adverbial phrase. Comp. the origin of 'debonair,' L'Alleg. 24, and 'demure,' Il Pens. 32.

41. Pollute: formed directly from Lat. participle pollutus=polluted. Such verbs as 'to pollute,' 'to instruct,' 'to accept,' 'to exhaust,' 'to devote,' etc., are all formed from Latin participles, and this fact frequently led to the employment of these verbs as if they were participles: hence in Milton we find 'pollute'=polluted, 'instruct'=instructed, 'elevate'=elevated, etc. When the participial force of these words was entirely forgotten a second participial sign was added, and hence the current forms 'polluted,' etc. See Trench, Eng. Past and Present, vi.; also Prof. Masson's Essay on Milton's English, and Abbott, § 342. Compare 'whist,' line 64, and note.

41. sinful blame. 'Blame' = crime, fault (comp. Mach. iv. 3. 124); as 'blameful' = guilty, and 'blameless' = innocent. All Nature is here regarded as guilty: comp. Spenser's Hymn of Heavenly Love, 218, "Then rouse thyself, O Earth, out of thy soil . . . Unmindful of that dearest Lord of thine."

42. saintly veil. Comp. Par. Lost, ix. 1054, "Innocence that as a veil, Had shadowed them from knowing ill, was gone," etc.

maiden white, unsullied purity. See Latham's Dictionary for examples of 'maiden' applied to (a) flowers and weapons, e.g. 'maiden sword,' 1 Hen. IV. v. 4. 134; (b) a fortress that has never been taken; (c) an oration ('maiden speech'); (d) assizes where no one is condemned: etc.

44. so near, so closely. This is a more natural interpretation than to regard the phrase as = he being so near.

45. cease, put an end to, cause to cease. See note on Lyc. 133: and compare Cymb. v. 5, "would cease The present power of life"; Timon of Ath. ii. 1, "Be not ceased with slight denial." Compare the force of the word in such imperatives as "Cease then this impious rage," Par. Lost, v. 845.

46. meek-eyed. Comp. Comus, 213, "pure-eyed Faith, white-handed Hope."

47. olive green. Comp. 3 Hen. VI. iv. 6: "An olive branch and laurel crown, As likely to be blest in peace and war."

48. the turning sphere. What Spenser (H. of Heavenly Love, 25) calls "that mighty bound which doth embrace the rolling spheres," the allusion being to the old cosmology which regarded the universe as a frame-work of sphere within sphere, the Earth being at the centre. See note, line 125.

49. harbinger. Here used in its radical sense = one preparing a lodging or 'harbour' for another: its current meaning is 'fore-runner,' in which the essence of the original signification is lost. The M.E. is herbergeour (A.S. here, an army, and beorgan, to shelter) = one who prepares lodgings for an army: comp. Bacon's Apophthegms, 54, "There was a harbinger who had lodged a gentleman in a very ill room." The origin of the word is disguised by the intrusion of the letter n, as in 'messenger' from message, 'porringer' from porridge, etc. See Trench's Select Glossary and comp. Milton's Song on May Morning, l; Mach. i. 4. 46; Hamlet i. 1. 122; Morris, Outlines; etc.

50. turtle wing. The name 'turtle' belongs originally to a species of dove: comp. M. W. of W. iii. 3, "We'll teach him to know turtles from jays"; Chaucer, Cant. Tales, 10013, "The turtle's voice is heard, mine owen sweet "; and Song of Sol. ii. 12. The name is from Lat. tur-tur, a word which imitates the coo of the dove. 'Turtle' applied to the sea-tortoise is the same word: "the English sailors having a difficulty with the Portuguese tartaruga, a tortoise or a turtle, and the Span. tortuga, a tortoise, overcame that difficulty by substituting the Eng. turtle with a grand disregard of the difference between the two creatures." (Skeat). The turtle-dove is a type of true love.

51. myrtle. According to Dr. Johnson, the 'emblem of supreme command.' At this time there was peace throughout the Roman dominions; hence the plant may here be the symbol of peace.

52. strikes, produces suddenly and as if by enchantment. Comp. the procedure of the enchanter Comus (line 659), "If I but wave this wand, Your nerves are all chained up," etc. Latham quotes Dryden's lines: "Take my caduceus!... And strike a terror through the Stygian strand." Dunster sees in Milton's use of 'strike' a recollection of the Lat. phrase foedus ferire, to strike a bargain, but there is no thought of a compact here: the idea is the suddenness of the result, as in the phrases 'struck dumb,' 'awe-struck,' etc.

53. No war. Of lines 53-84 Landor says that they form "the noblest piece of lyric poetry in any modern language that I am conversant with."

55. idle spear... hung. Here Milton, as he often does, introduces a custom of chivalry into classical times; comp. Sams. Agon. 1736, where Samson's father resolves to build his son a monument "with all his trophies hung"—the hanging up of trophies over the tomb of a hero being a practice of Gothic chivalry. See also Rich. III. i. 1, "Our bruised arms hung up for monuments." For a similar mixture of elements which, in other hands than those of Milton, might be incongruous, compare the blending of classical mythology and Christianity in Lycidas.

56. hookéd chariot; the covinus or falcatae quadrigae (Liv. i. 37, 41) of the Romans, who seem to have adopted it from the Kelts, the name covinus being Keltic. The wheels or axle-trees were armed with cutting instruments or hooks: comp. F. Q. v. 8. 28, "With iron wheels and hooks armed dreadfully."

59. awful, awe-struck. Here used subjectively: comp. Rich. II. iii. 3. 76, "To pay their awful duty to our presence." Contrast with the objective sense = awe-inspiring: 2 Hen. VI. v. 1. 98, "An awful princely sceptre"; also Par. Lost, i. 753. Similarly awesome and aweless occur in both senses.

60. sovrán: Milton's spelling of the word 'sovereign,' in which the g is due to a mistaken notion that the last syllable is cognate with reign. It is from Lat. superanum = chief (Ital. sovrano, O.F. souverain). Comp. Comus, 41, 639. Milton only once has 'sov'raign' (Par. Reg. i. 84) while times.

NOTES.

64. whist, hushed : see note, Il Pens. 55. In Tempest, i. 2. 379 ; " the wild waves whist " ; Sandys, Trans. of Ovid's Meta. " In dead of night, when all was whisht and still." ' Whist,' originally an interjection, was used as a verb, ' to whist ' = to command silence, the participle ' whist ' (for ' whisted,' Abbott, § 342) being equivalent to ' silenced.'

65. kist. Comp. M. of Ven. v. 1, " When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees." The spelling kist is due to the final sharp consonant : when this is doubled, as in pass, kiss, smell, etc., one of the letters is dropped before t ; hence past, kist, smelt.

66. Océan : read as O-ce-an. Comp. M. of Ven. v. 1. 1, " tossing on the océan " ; T. A. iv. 2. 101.

67. Who. Here used of an irrational thing, which, by pathetic fallacy, is endowed with forgetfulness : comp. Rape of Luc. 1805, " The dispers'd air who answered " ; Abbott, § 264.

forgot, forgotten. This use of the past tense for the past participle was common in Elizabethan English : comp. Abbott, § 343. It is due to the fact that the A.S. past participle was formed by prefixing ge- to all verbs (see note, line 155), and affixing en or ed. When the prefix ge was weakened to i- or y- or dropped altogether, and the suffix reduced to -e silent, the past participle sometimes corresponded with the past tense, and the form of the past tense came to be used for the participle.

68. birds of calm, halcyons ; the fable being that the sea was always calm while these birds were breeding—during the seven days preceding and the seven succeeding the shortest day of the year. In classical mythology Alcyōnē or Halcyōnē was the daughter of Aeolus and wife of Ceyx : husband and wife having called themselves Zeus and Hera, they were for their presumption metamorphosed into birds. Another version is that the husband perished at sea, and the grief-stricken wife having drowned herself the two were changed into birds : see Ovid's Meta. xi. 745, " Perque dies placidos hiberno tempore septem Incubat Halcyone pendentibus aequore nidis " ; 1 Hen. VI. i. 2. 131, " Halcyon days " (called in Greek ἀλκυονίδες ἡμέραι and in Latin alcyonei dies or Alcedonia). In the phrases ' halcyon beaks ' (King Lear, ii. 2. 84), ' halcyon bill ' (Marlowe, Jew of Malta), ' halcyon with her turning breast ' (Stover, Life and Death of Wolsey), the allusion is to the old belief that the halcyon (called by us the kingfisher), when suspended in the air, shows which way the wind blows. This superstition is turned to good account in G. Bernard Shaw's play, Saint Joan.

brooding. Comp. Par. Lost, vii. 243, " On the watery calm His brooding wings the Spirit of God outspread"; also L'Alleg. 6, and note there. There is no doubt that in the present case 'brooding' is to be taken literally.

69. amaze. The use of 'amaze' as a substantive is almost obsolete, its place being taken by 'amazement': comp. Addison's Cato, iv. 3. 58, "With pleasure and amaze I stand transported." See further, Sonnet xv. 3.

70. Every word in this line intensifies the notion of 'fixedness.' On 'steadfast,' see notes Il Pens. 32, and line 111, below.

71. precious influence. Compare L'Alleg. 122, "Whose bright eyes Rain influence," and note there: also note on Il Pens. 24. Shakespeare has 'the skiey influences,' M. for M. iii. 1; 'planetary influence,' K. Lear, i. 2. 135; and for some of his numerous allusions to astrology see his Sonnets, 14, 15, 25, 26; Rom. and Jul. i. 4, v. 3; King Lear, i. 2. 136; ii. 2; iv. 3; Twelfth Night, i. 3, i. 4; ii. 1, ii. 5; Much Ado, i. 3; ii. 1; v. 2. See also Trench's Study of Words on the astrological element in the English vocabulary. 'Precious': Milton wrote pretious (Lat. pretium, value), the c being due to old French precios.

73. For all. These two words in combination are equivalent to 'notwithstanding': comp. Milton's twelfth sonnet, On the Detraction, etc., 14, "For all this waste of wealth and loss of blood," where all does not qualify waste. It is sometimes said that, when the phrase is expanded, all is found to be the subject of an unexpressed verb, the meaning of 'notwithstanding' being expressed by for alone: this would explain the above examples, but not such as the following: Tindale, Acts, xvi. 39, "They have beaten us openly ... for all that we are Romans"; John, xxi. 11, "For all there were so many"; Cymb. v. 4. 209, "For all he be a Roman"; or line 74 of this poem. See Abbott, § 154.

74. Lucifer, i.e. the planet Venus, as the morning-star or light-bringer (lux, light; fero, to bear): Milton's conceit is that day-break is a warning for the stars to disappear. See further in the Song on May Morn. Grammatically 'for all' governs 'Lucifer.'

75. orbs. Either denoting the stars themselves as in M. of Ven. v. 1, "There's not the smallest orb," etc., or their orbits, as in Par. Lost, v. 860, "When fatal course had circled his full orb." Milton also has 'orb' in the sense of 'wheel' (Par. Lost, vi. 828), and 'eye' (Par. Lost, iii. 25). Comp. M. N. D. iii. 2. 61, "Venus in her glimmering sphere."

76. bespake. Not merely 'spake,' but 'spake with authority.' Milton sometimes uses the compound form as a mere equivalent for the simple verb: see note, Lyc. 112. The verb is used in Par. Lost, ii. 849; iv. 1005; and Par. Reg. i. 43.

bid, bade (the strong form being the more common). The form bode is obsolete. Bid has arisen out of the past participle bidden : see note on 'forgot,' line 67. This is one of those verbs after which the simple infinitive (without to) is used. Such omission of to now occurs with so few verbs that to is often called the sign of the infinitive; but in Early English the only sign of the infinitive was the termination -en (e.g. speken, to speak; he can speken). The infinitive, being used as a noun, had a dative form called the gerund which was preceded by to; and confusion between the gerundial infinitive and the simple infinitive led to the general use of to. Comp. Arcades, 13, "Envy bid conceal the rest"; in Lyc. 22, bid is a different verb (see note there).

78. Had given, etc.; had given place to day. 'Her' may refer either to 'gloom' or 'day,' but comp. Milton's Vacation Exercise, 58, "To the next I may resign my room," on the analogy of which 'her' would refer to 'gloom.'

79. Compare what is said of the moon in Il. Pens. 59, and see also P. L. iv. 35. On wonted, see note, l. 10.

80. hid his head, etc. Warton quotes from Spenser's Shepherds' Calendar; April, 75-83,

"I sawe Phoebus thrust out his golden hedde,
Upon her to gaze;
But, when he sawe how broade her beames did spredde,
It did him amaze.
He blusht to see another Sunne below,
Ne durst againe his fyrye face out showe:
Let him, if he dare,
His brightnesse compare
With hers, to have the overthrowe."

81. As, as if, as though. This use of 'as' to introduce a supposition is archaic: comp. Havelock the Dane, 508, "Starinde als he were wod"; 2 Hen. VI. i. 1. 103, "Undoing all, as all had never been"; Par. Reg. iv. 447, "I heard the wrack, As earth and sky would mingle"; Tennyson's Enid, 210, "As to abolish him." See Abbott, §§ 101, 107.

82. new-enlighten'd: adj. compounded of a participle and a simple adverb. Comp. "new-intrusted," Comus, 36; "new-enlivened," ibid. 228; "new-spangled," Lyc. 170; "new-created," Par. Lost. iii. 89; "smooth-dittied," Comus, 86.

84. burning axletree. Comp. Comus, 95, "the gilded car of day His glowing axle doth allay": Aen. vi. 482, "Atlas axem umero torquet"; Sandys, Ovid's Meta. i. 7, "And burn heaven's axletree"; Troilus and Cressida, i. 3. 65, "Strong as the axletree In which the Heavens ride." 'Axletree' = axis, M.E. axle-tre, was in earlier use than the simple word axle, and included all the senses of that word as well as of axis. The only surviving sense of the word is that of 'the fixed bar on the rounded ends of which the wheels of a carriage revolve,' being replaced in its other significations by 'axle' or 'axis.' Axle does not occur in Old English at all, but has been taken from the 13th cent. compound axle-tree = ax-tree (O.E. eax, axle; treow = beam, as in roof-tree, saddle-tree, door-tree, boot-tree, etc.).

85. shepherds: see Luke, ii. 8. lawn: see note, L'Alleg. 71, and comp. Par. Lost, iv. 252, "lawns or level downs."

86. Or ere. 'Or' = ere = before: about this there is no dispute, the use of or for ere (A.S. aer) being common enough; comp. Psalm xc. 2; Hamlet, i. 2. 183; Temp. i. 2. 11, etc. But it is disputed whether 'ere' in the combination 'or ere' is (1) a corruption of e'er = ever, so that 'or ere' = before ever; or (2) the preposition 'ere' = before, so that 'or ere' = ere ere = before before (a reduplication due to the meaning of or having nearly or altogether died out). The latter is the view favoured by Skeat, who regards such a phrase as 'or ever' as due to a confusion of ere with e'er. The former is adopted by Prof. Hales on the ground that ere, on the analogy of such phrases as 'ere twice' (M. for M. iv. 3. 92), 'ere yet' (Par. Lost, x. 584), is clearly adverbial and modifies a clause: in the text 'or ere the point of dawn' is, therefore, equivalent to 'Before ever the point of dawn (had come).' To this explanation there are few objections except that in Early English we have 'before er,' 'before or,' where the second word can hardly be a corruption of ever, and that it is more likely that ever should replace ere than vice versa. See Abbott, § 131.

point of dawn. This is the French point de jour: comp. Genesis, xxv. 32, "at the point to die"; Davies' Immor. of Soul, "when time's first point began."

88. than, then. Than and then are radically the same word: usage has differentiated them.

89. mighty Pan. Pan being the god of flocks and shepherds among the Greeks, and Christ being spoken of in Scripture as 'the Good Shepherd' (John, x. 11, Heb. xiii. 20), Milton here follows Spenser in speaking of Christ as the true Pan—the true God of shepherds. See Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar, May, 54: "When great Pan account of shepherds shall ask," with the Gloss: "Great Pan is Christ, the very God of all shepherds which calleth himselfe the greate, and good shepheard. The name is most rightly (methinkes) applyed to Him; for Pan signifieth all, or omnipotent, which is onely the Lord Jesus. And by that name (as I remember) he is called of Eusebius, in his fiftie booke De Preparat. Evang., who thereof telleth a proper storie to that purpose. Which story is first recorded of Plutarch, in his booke of the ceasing of Oracles; and of Lavetere translated, in his booke of walking sprights; who sayth, that about the same time that our Lord suffered His most bitter passion, for the redemption of man, certain passengers sayling from Italy to Cyprus, and passing by certaine Iles called Paxae, heard a voyce calling alowde Thamus, Thamus ! (now Thamus was the name of an Ægyptian, which was Pilote of the ship) who, giving care to the cry, was bidden, when he came to Palodes, to tel that the great Pan was dead: which he doubting to doe, yet for that when he came to Palodes, there sodeinly was such a calme of winde, that the shippe stooode still in the sea unmoved, he was forced to cry alowd that Pan was dead; wherewithall there was heard suche piteous outcryes and dreadfull shriking, as hath not bene the like. By whych Pan, though of some be understoode the great Satanas, whose kingdome at that time vas by Christ conquered, the gates of hell broken up, and death by death delivered to eternal death (for at that time, as he sayth, all Oracles surceased, and enchanted spirits, that were wont to delude the people, thenceforth held theyr peace :) and also at the demaund of the Emperoure Tiberius, who that Pan should be, answere was made him by the wisest and best learned, that it was the sonne of Mercurie and Penelope; yet I thinke it more properly meant of the death of Christ, the onely and very Pan then suffering for his flock." Mrs. Browning has a poem entitled "The Dead Pan," which is founded on the same tradition. Comp. Cowley's lines:

"And though Pan's death long since all or'cles broke, Yet still in rhyme the fiend Apollo spoke."

90. Was ... come: see note, Lycidas, 97. With some intransitive verbs of motion (e.g. to go, come, arrive, enter), either of the auxiliaries be and have is used; in Elizabethan writers both forms are common: thus 'I am arrived' expresses my present state, while 'I have arrived' expresses the activity which preceded the present state. This distinction of meaning is not now strictly observed, and the auxiliary have is in general use.

92. Was. The verb is singular because 'their loves' and 'their sheep' each form a single subject or topic of conversation.

silly thoughts, simple thoughts. This is evidently suggested by Spenser's H. of Heavenly Love:

"When Him the silly Shepherds came to see, Whom greatest Princes sought on lowest knee."

On the changes of meaning undergone by many words which first signified goodness, and finally foolishness, see Trench's Study of Words, and Select Glossary: "'silly' (the same as German selig) has successively meant (1) blissful (so the Prompt Parv.), (2) innocent, (3) harmless, (4) weakly foolish. 'O sely woman, full of innocence,' Chaucer, Legend of Fair Women, 1252." The M.E. form was sely; A.S. sælig or gesælig, happy. The word does not recur in Milton's poems.

93. such ... as: see note, L'Alleg. 29.

95. strook, produced. Milton uses three forms of the participle—strook (Com. 301, Par. Lost. ii. 165, vi. 863, x. 413, xi. 264, Par. Reg. iv. 576), struck (Sams. Agon. 1686), strucken (Par. Lost. ix. 1064), his choice being determined by the demands of rhyme and rhythm. There is also a form stricken. 'To strike music' is, of course, applicable to stringed instruments: comp. Alexander's Feast, 99; Collins' Ode on The Passions, 23.

96. Divinely-warbled voice. As in 'warbled string' (Arcades, 87) 'warbled' may be taken in an active sense = warbling, or passively = made to warble or trill. The perfect participle frequently occurs in Elizabethan English in this sense: comp. Sams. Agon. 119, 'languished' = languishing; ib. 186, 'festered' = festering; Par. Lost. iv. 699, 'flourished' = flourishing.

97. stringéd noise, i.e. the music of the heavenly harps (see At a Solemn Music, l. 13). On this sense of 'noise,' see note, Il Pens. 61, and comp. "God is gone up with a merry noise," Book of Common Prayer, Psalms, xlvii. 5; "one noise (i.e. company) of fiddlers," Ben Jonson's Epicaene; "that melodious noise," At a Solemn Music, 18.

98. As: 'such as' or 'as (which).' in blissful rapture took. On this use of 'take' = charm, captivate, compare 'take the ear' in Tempest, v. i. 313: and see Comus, 558: "Silence was took ere she was ware." On 'rapture,' see note, Il Pens. 46.

99. loth, reluctant. The same as 'loath' (M.E. loth: A.S. lath, hateful). That which we are loath to do is loathsome or loathly (Temp. iv. 1; 2 Hen. IV. iv. 4).

100. thousand: see Abbott, § 87.

close. Here used in its technical sense = the final cadence of a piece of music: Rich. II. ii. 1. 12, and Com. 548; also Dryden's Fables, "At every close she made, the attending throng Reply'd." Curiously enough Dryden also has close in the sense of beginning: "In the close of night Philomel begins her heavenly lay," the close of day being the beginning of night.

101. Nature: nom. to 'was' (line 104).

102. hollow ... seat. Either implying that the Moon is a hollow shell or that the sound fills the vault of heaven in which the Moon is placed.

103. Cynthia's: see Hymn to Diana; and Il Pens. 59. aery region: comp. Com. 231, "thy airy shell" = the atmosphere. thrilling: attributive to 'sound,' l. 101 = warbling, or perhaps with some reference to its radical sense of piercing (comp. nostril).

104. won, persuaded. In this sense followed by an infinitive: comp. Par. Lost. xii. 502, "They win great numbers to receive With joy the tidings."

106. its. One of the three instances of the occurrence of the word its in Milton's poetry (the other two being in Par. Lost, i. 254, iv. 813): see notes, Il Pens. 128, and line 139 of this poem.

107. alone, by itself. Nature was therefore no longer required. The meaning is not 'and no other,' for Nature had hitherto done so.

108. in happier union. The sense is compressed: 'She knew that such harmony as was now heard could by itself hold all heaven and earth in union'; and further, 'She knew that this union would be happier than that produced by Nature,' viz. the harmony of the spheres. Comp. Arcades, 71.

109. surrounds, encompasses. Milton is said to be the first author of note who used the word in this current sense, which it has acquired through a supposed connection with round. Shakespeare does not use it. Its original sense is 'to overflow' (Lat. super-undare).

their sight = them seeing: see note, Lyc. 184; and comp. Ham. v. 1. 286.

110. globe of circular light. Put, by hypallage, for 'a circular globe (or body) of light.' For this use of globe comp. Par. Lost, ii. 512, "a globe of fiery seraphim"; so that the phrase 'circular globe' is not necessarily redundant. Milton's language regarding figures, e.g. circle, wheel, globe, orb, cube, sphere, etc., is somewhat confusing: see Sams. Agon. 172 ('sphere' = circle); Par. Lost, v. 593 ('orb' = circle); ib. vi. 552 ('cube' = square); etc. Comp. Marsh's Lect. on Eng. Lang. xxvi.

111. with long beams ... array'd: clothed the modest night with its long rays. Comp. Comus, 340, "long-levelled rule of streaming light": Sams. Agon. 549, "Heaven's fiery rod." shamefaced: corrupted from shame-fast; comp. F. Q. iv. 10. 50, "shamefastness." The termination fast = firm: see notes, Il Pens. 32, and line 70, above.

112. helméd, helmeted (A.S. helm, that which protects: helmet is a dimin.). Cherubim ... Seraphim: Hebrew plurals; the English Bible has the irregular double plural cherubims (Gen. iii. 24; Exod. xxv. 18). Shakespeare has cherubim as a singular (Othello, iv. 2. 63) and Dryden cherubin. When the word cherub is applied to a beautiful child, the plural now current is cherubs: cherubim or cherubims being used of celestial spirits only. For other words with their original plural and an English plural both in use, see Morris, Eng. Accidence, § 84; beau, focus, appendix, formula, etc. Comp. At a Solemn Music, 10, 12.

114. display'd. Comp. Il Pens. 149.

116. unexpressive: see notes, Lycidas, 176, 64; and comp. As You Like It, iii. 2. 28, "The fair, the chaste and unexpressive she."

117. Such music. Warton refers to Par. Lost, vii. 558 et seq.

119. The allusions to the 'sons of the morning' and the creation of earth, sea, and sky are explained by Job xxxviii. 4-11, "Where was thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding. Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it? Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? or who laid the corner stone thereof; When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy? Or who shut up the sea with doors, when it brake forth, as if it had issued out of the womb? When I made the cloud the garment thereof, and thick darkness a swaddling-band for it, And brake up for it my decreed place, and set bars and doors, And said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further: and here shall thy proud waves be stayed." See also Isaiah xiv. 12.

sung, sang. See note on 'sunk,' Lyc. 102.

122. well-balanced world: comp. Par. Lost, iv. 1000, "The pendulous round Earth with balanced air In counterpoise," hinges: comp. Par. Reg. iv. 413, "From the four hinges of the world." A hinge is strictly that upon which anything hangs.

123. cast, laid (Lat. jacere): comp. 2 Kings, xix. 32, and P.L. vi. 869.

124. weltering: see note, Lyc. 13.

oozy: see note, Lyc. 175; and comp. Par. Lost, vii. 303, Vac. Ex., 92, Tempest, i. 2. 252.

125. Ring out, ye crystal spheres. Milton's references to the music of the spheres are numerous: comp. Arcades, 62:

"Then listen I

To the celestial Siren's harmony,

That sit upon the nine infolded spheres," etc.

Also Comus, 112, "the starry quire"; ib. 243, "give resounding grace to all Heavens harmonies"; ib. 1021, "Higher than the sphery chime"; Par. Lost, v. 620,

"Mystical dance, which yonder starry sphere

Of planets and of fixed in all her wheels

Resembles nearest, mazes intricate,

Eccentric, interwolved, yet regular,

Then most, when most irregular they seem;

And in their motions harmony divine

So smooths her charming tones, that God's own ear

Listens delighted."

Also the line, "Sphere-born harmonious Sisters, Voice and Verse." In the present case, as in the lines quoted from Arcades Milton refers (1) to the Pythagorean doctrine of the music of the spheres; and (2) to that system of astronomy developed by Eudoxus, Plato, Aristotle, Hipparchus, Ptolemy, and others, which is usually called the Ptolemaic system.

(1) Pythagoras (B.C. 580), having remarked that the pitch of notes depends on the rate of vibration, and also that the planets move with different velocities, was led to extend the same relation to the planets and to suppose that they emit sounds proportional to their respective distances from the Earth, thus forming a celestial concert too melodious to affect the gross ears of mankind. This is what is meant by the music or harmony of the spheres. Plato supposes this harmony to be produced by Sirens.

(2) According to the Ptolemaic system of astronomy the Earth was the centre of our universe, and the apparent motions of the other heavenly bodies were due to the fact that they were fixed in transparent or crystal spheres enclosing the central Earth at different distances. Plato recognized only eight of such spheres, the outermost being that of the Fixed Stars. Later, two more spheres were added—the crystalline sphere outside of that of the fixed stars, and, beyond all, the Tenth Sphere, called the Primum Mobile or ‘first moved,’ which contained all the others. In the above passage from Arcades Milton speaks of the music of the spheres as being produced by the nine Muses that sit upon the nine inner spheres.

Shakespeare alludes to the music of the spheres in a beautiful passage (M. of V. v. 1. 61):

“There’s not the smallest orb which thou behold’st
But in his motion like an angel sings
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubins,” etc.

Comp. also Pericles, v. 1. 230; Ant. and Cleop. v. 2. 83; etc. For a detailed account see Plato’s Republic (Bk. x.), where a theory is given of the relation of the Fates to the Pythagorean system. Fate or Necessity has on her knees a spindle of adamant, and the turning of this spindle directs the motions of the heavenly bodies. “The spindle turns on the knees of Necessity; and on the upper surface of each circle is a siren who goes round with it, hymning a single sound and note. The eight together form one harmony, and round about at equal intervals there is another band, three in number, each sitting upon her throne: these are the Fates, daughters of Necessity, who are clothed in white raiment and have crowns of wool upon their heads, Lachesis and Clotho and Atropos, who accompany with their voices the harmony of the sirens.”

126. human ears. The heavenly harmony is inaudible to men’s impure ears: comp. Arc. 72, “the heavenly tune which none can hear Of human mould with gross unpurgéd ear”; also Com. 458, 997. Once, at once, once for all.

127. touch our senses. Comp. Il Pens. 13, "too bright To hit the sense of human sight"; M. of V. v. 1. 76, Cor. v. 2. 11.

128. silver chime. Comp. Com. 1021, "sphery chime." 'Chime' is strictly 'harmony': the word is cognate with cymbal (l. 208).

130. bass ... organ. Milton wrote base. On this line Warton says: "Milton was not yet a Puritan. Afterwards, he and his friends, the fanatics, would not have allowed of so papistical an establishment as an organ and a choir, even in Heaven."

132. consort, harmony. The word is sometimes mistakenly written concert: see note, Il Pens. 145, and cf. S.M., l. 27. Mr. Palgrave thinks it uncertain whether the word is here used in the sense of accompanying or simply of concert. to: see notes, Lyc. 13, 33, 44.

134. Enwrap: see note, L'Alleg. 136.

135. the age of gold; the reign of Saturn, a time of peace and happiness: see note, Il Pens. 24. Comp. Ovid's Meta. i. 89 et seq.: Aurea prima sata est aetas, etc.; and As You Like It, i. 1, "fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world."

136. speckled Vanity. Why should Vanity be so described? Either (as Warton thinks) because Milton had in mind the maculosum nefas (foul crime) of Horace, Odes, iv. 5. 22, 'speckled' being equivalent to 'corrupt'; or because 'speckled' = spotted, variegated, and therefore 'showy.' It would almost seem that Milton had in view Spenser's description of the vain serpent, (Virgil's Gnat, 250): "An huge great Serpent, all with speckles pied ... And with proud vaunt his head aloft doth hold; His crest above, spotted with purple dye." Comp. Par. Lost, ix. 429, "specked with gold"; M. N. D. i. 1. 110, Rich. II. iii. 2. 134.

138. leprous ... mould. The leprosy of sin is a common metaphor. The 'earthly mould' is the Earth itself (see Mayhew and Skeat's M. E. Dict.; on molde=in the earth, in the world). Comp. Rom. vi. 6, and The Princess, iv. 203.

139. Hell itself ... her. Here her and itself are both used of Hell, an instance of the unsettled usage of the pronouns in Milton's time: see notes on its, l. 106, and his, Il Pens. 128. Milton's use of her in this case may be due either to his fondness for the feminine personification or to the fact that A.S. hel is feminine: so in l. 148, A.S. Heofon being feminine. Comp. Com. 222, where her is used of a cloud, the Lat. nubes being fem. See, further, notes on Il Pens. 92, 143.

140. Warton quotes Æn. viii. 245, Regna recludat pallida, etc., "(As if Earth) should expose the realms of ghastly gloom which the gods hate, and from above the vast abyss were to be seen, and the spectres dazzled by the influx of day." peering day. 'To peer is to pry or peep (active) or to come just into sight (neuter); the latter is the meaning here. Comp. Tam. Shrew, iv. 3, "Honour peereth through the meanest habit." But Dunster probably exaggerates the significance of the word when he says: "The peering day here is the first dawn of the Gospel, by the birth of the Redeemer."

142. return to men. An allusion to Astrea, the goddess of Justice, who during the golden age lived among men; but when that age passed away, withdrew with her sister Pudicitia. (Purity). In the lines on the Death of a Fair Infant, 50, Milton calls her "that just Maid who once before Forsook the hated earth." Comp. Jonson's Golden Age Restored.

143. Orb'd ... between. This is the reading of the second edition (1673); the first edition (1645) had:

"Th' enameld Arras of the Rainbow wearing,
And Mercy sat between."

'Orb'd in' = encircled by, either partially or totally (in which case we may suppose a double rainbow, as suggested by Dunster). like glories, i.e. similar to the glorious tints of the rainbow.

145. sheen, brightness. Comp. Com. 893, 'azurn sheen'; ib. 1003, 'spangled sheen' Epit. on M. of W. 73, 'clad in radiant sheen'; F. Q. ii. 1. 10, 'So fair and sheen' (adj.); On Death of Fair Infant, 48, 'sheeny' (adj.). Sheen is cognate with show.

146. tissued: either 'variegated' or 'interwoven.' Comp. Com. 301, "plighted clouds"; also Par. Lost, v. 592.

steering. Contrast the intrans. use of the verb 'steer' (=move) in Sams. Agon. iii, "The tread of many feet steering this way."

150. yet: see note, Il Pens. 30.

152. bitter cross. Comp. 1 Hen. IV. i. 1. 25, "those blessed feet ... were nailed For our advantage on the bitter cross"; also M. for M. ii. 2. 74, Rich. III. i. 2. 194.

153. loss: what we have lost. Comp. Par. Lost, iii. 280-302.

154. both Himself, etc. Comp. Par. Lost, iii. 296,

"Dying rise; and rising, with him raise
His brethren ransomed with his own dear life."

155. ychain'd. See note on 'yclept,' L'Alleg. 12. Spenser has yclad, ybent, ygo, ypent, yrapt, ytost, ywrake, etc. In M.E. the prefix ge- was weakened to i- or y- and disappeared altogether in the northern dialect.

156. wakeful. Here used objectively: comp. 'dreadful,' line 164, and 'awful' (see note, l. 59).

trump of doom: comp. "At the last trump ... the dead shall be raised," 1 Cor. xv. 52.

158. The references are to the giving of the Mosaic Law : see Exodus, xix.

160. aged Earth. Comp. Rom. and Jul. ii. 3, "The earth, that's nature's mother" (a classical notion); 1 Hen. IV. iii. 1. 32, "the old beldam Earth."

aghast: Milton wrote 'agast,' for which 'aghast' has been erroneously substituted and is still employed. It is the participle of an old verb agasten (a- intensive; O.E. gaestan, to terrify); comp. Chaucer, Legend of G. W. 1171, "What may it be That me agasteth in myn slep"; Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 21, "Or other griesly thing that him aghast." The fuller form of the past participle = 'agasted,' and the present participle = 'agasting,' are both obsolete; comp. Stanyhurst's Aeneid, ii. 29, "Shivering mothers ... do wander agasted." (Comp. the two participles roast and roasted.) The unetymological spelling with gh appears first in Scotch about 1425, and became general about 1700: it is probably due to a supposed connection with ghast, ghaist, ghost. Still another false derivation is seen in the forms agazed, agased; comp. 1 Hen. VI. i. 1. 126, "The whole army stood agazed on him." This spelling is due to supposed connection with gaze, an error rendered possible by the fact that the vowel is long in O.E. gaestan: hence agāsed. (Comp. lit, lighted; pāst, pāced, etc.).

161. terroure: Fr. terreur. The spelling points to the fact that the word came into English from the Lat. terror, indirectly through French; but (see note on horroure, l. 172) the spelling alone is not conclusive evidence of this. Comp. All's Well, ii. 3. 4.

162. Comp. Par. Lost, vi. 217:

"All Heaven resounded, and had Earth been then,
All Earth had to her centre shook."

centre. So in Com. 382, 'centre' = centre of the Earth, and in Par. Lost, i. 686, "Men also ... Ransacked the centre." Sometimes the word was used of the Earth itself, as the fixed centre of the whole universe according to the Ptolemaic astronomy (Par. Reg. iv. 534). Comp. Hamlet, ii. 2. 159.

163. last session, the Last Judgment. 'Session' and 'assize' (a cognate word through the French; Lat. sedere, to sit) are both commonly applied in our literature, with such adjs. as great, last, etc., to the Day of Judgment: comp. Hampole's Prick of Conscience, 5514: "The aythen men at that great assys"; Sylvester's Du Bartas, i. 2: "When God his Sizes holds." Session, assessment, assize, excise (a corruption of assize), size, etc., are cognate. Comp. Par. Lost, ii. 514.

164. spread, displayed: comp. Par. Lost, ii. 960.

167. But now : and only now.

168. old Dragon : see Rev. xx. 2, “ (An angel) laid hold on the dragon, the old serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him for a thousand years.” So in Sams. Agon. 1692, and in Par. Lost, x. 529, dragon = serpent. Comp. Com. 393, ‘dragon watch,’ and Tennyson’s Dream of F. W. 255, ‘dragon eyes,’ where the reference is to the dragon’s keenness of vision, an idea contained in the name (Gr. δέρκομαι, to see). Comp. further, Il Pens. 59, and M. N. D. iii. 2. 379 where the allusion is to its swiftness.

169. straiter. ‘Strait’ is a doublet of strict. Comp. F. Q. i. 11. 23, “in straighter bandes,” where ‘strait’ is confused with ‘straight.’

171. wroth. Milton first wrote wrath, the older form (A.S. wrāth, angry). Wrath is not found as a subst. in A.S.

172. Swinges ... tail. Comp. Rev. xii. 4, and the account of the Great Dragon in F. Q. i. 11. 113 :

“His huge long taylor, wound up in hundred foldes,
Does overspred his long bras-scaly back ...
It sweepeth all the land behind him farre” :

also ib. 23.

“His hideous taylor then hurled he about.”

Browne refers also to a passage of Marvell’s First Anniversary which seems to have been suggested by Milton’s lines : “And stars still fall, and still the dragon’s tail Swinges the volumes of its horrid flail.” So Waller, with reference to the whale, speaks of its “tail’s impetuous swinge.” ‘Swinges’ = brandishes, beats about : this is the only case in which Milton uses the word, which is really the causal form of swing. Comp. drink and drench, me-thinks and think, sit and set, fall and fell, etc. The intrusive d in the form swindges (used in the original editions) is due to the soft g. horror : see note on ‘terroure,’ l. 161 ; this word comes directly from Latin, the spelling being due to force of analogy. Comp. Com. 38, “the nodding horror of whose shady brows,” where the word has its radical sense of shagginess (Lat. horrere, to bristle), as it may have here. Or ‘horror’ may = object of horror : see note on ‘sorrow,’ Lyc. 166, and Comp. Dryden’s Trans. of Ovid’s Meta. : “Shook the shady honours of her head.” folded : see description of Spenser’s dragon, quoted above.

173. oracles are dumb. “The idea, from this point to line 236, is that of the sudden paralysis of the gods and enchantments of the Pagan religions at the birth of Christ” (Masson). So Rabelais in Pantagruel, iii. 24, says : “You must know that the oracles are all of them become as dumb as so many fishes since the advent of that Saviour King, whose coming into the world has made all oracles and prophecies to cease.” See also Gloss on Shepherd’s

Calendar, May, quoted in the notes on l. 89. The period at which oracles ceased to give forth their deliverances has been the subject of controversy. Eusebius and many Christian writers held the view here adopted by Milton, that they became silent at the birth of Christ, and doubtless the superstition, which had long lost its hold on the public mind, gradually disappeared before the light of Christianity. Nevertheless, there is abundant evidence that the oracles were consulted during several centuries of the Christian era, and edicts against them were issued by various emperors. Many of the Christian fathers regarded them, somewhat inconsistently, as due to the inspiration of the devil; and this might be the view held by Milton (see lines 167-170 and Par. Reg. 455, where Christ is made to say to Satan; "No more shalt thou by oracling abuse The Gentiles; henceforth oracles are ceased.") See further in notes, ll. 176, 177, 178. 'Oracle' (Lat. oraculum, a double diminutive from orare, to speak) is a term applied to the utterances or responses of a deity, to the deity responding, or to the place where the response is uttered.

174. hideous hum. Comp. Virgil's account of the Cumaean Sibyl when Aeneas went to consult her before descending into the lower world (Æn. vi. 42-100); when inspired by the god Apollo she "from her cell shrills forth awful mysteries and booms again from the cavern, robing her truth in darkness."

175. deceiving, deceitful, or (at least) ambiguous.

176. Apollo ... shrine. The most famous oracles of antiquity were those of Apollo: he was consulted at over twenty of these, e.g. Delphi, Abdera, Delos, Lesbos, etc. A 'shrine' is a place sacred to a divinity: see note on 'cell,' l. 180. Comp. Virgil's Æn. ii. 351: Excessere omnes, adytis arisque relictis.

177. divine, i.e. utter presages or cause them to be uttered. In his essay on the Pagan Oracles De Quincey says: "The fathers regarded it as a duty of Christianity to destroy Oracles; and holding that baseless creed, some of them went on to affirm, in mere defiance of history, that Christianity had destroyed Oracles. But why did the fathers fancy it so special a duty of the Christian faith to destroy Oracles? Simply for these two reasons, viz., that (1) Most falsely they supposed prophecy to be the main function of an Oracle; whereas it did not enter into the main business of an Oracle by so much as once in a thousand responses. (2) Not less erroneously they assumed this to be the inevitable parent of a collision with Christianity, for all prophecy, and the spirit of prophecy, they supposed to be a regular prerogative of Christianity, sacred, in fact, to the true faith by some inalienable right. But no such claim is anywhere advanced in Scripture."

178. steep of Delphos. 'Delphos' is the mediaeval form of 'Delphi,' the name of a small town in Phocis, situated on the S.W.

extremity of Mt. Parnassus in Greece. Here was the most celebrated oracle of Apollo, the oracular divinations being uttered by a priestess called Pythea or the Pythoness in the temple of that god. From a chasm in the centre of the building rose a mephitic vapour, and the priestess sat on a tripod over the chasm, so that she might be readily intoxicated by the exhalations. The words she uttered while in this frenzied state were believed to be the revelations of Apollo. The Delphic oracle was finally suppressed by Theodosius. The name Delphos (applied to Delphi) is used by Milton, Par. Reg. i. 458, and by Shakespeare, Wint. Tale, ii. 1. Comp. Lines on Shakespeare, "Delphic lines" = oracular lines: Gray's Prog. of Poesy, 66, "Woods, that wave o'er Delphi's steep."

179. nightly. Comp. Il Pens. 84, Arc. 48. 'Nightly' here = nocturnal, pertaining to night. It is an adj., though its force is that of an adverb. Comp. Wordsworth, "The nightly hunter lifting up his eyes" = The hunter lifting up his eyes at night. trance: state of ecstasy; see note, Il Pens. 165. Sometimes the paroxysms of the priestess were so dreadful that the priests and suppliants fled in terror: comp. Virgil's Æn. vi. 100. breathed spell; spell due to the exhalations from beneath the tripod: on 'spell' see note, Il Pens. 170; the word was first used in a good sense, but occurs in the bad sense of 'magic' as early as Gower's Confessio Amantis (1393).

180. pale-eyed. Afterwards used in Pope's Eloisa, 21, "Shrines where their vigils pale-eyed virgins keep." Comp. Hen. V. iv. 2. 47, "pale-dead eyes"; Shakespeare has also 'pale-visaged,' 'pale-faced,' 'pale-hearted,' 'pale hope,' etc. cell, i.e. the adytum or innermost shrine, accessible only to the priests and the initiated (Lat. cella).

181. o'er: attributive to 'mountains.'

183. voice of weeping. Comp. the language of Isaiah, lxx. 19, and Matt. ii. 18. The allusion is explained by the Gloss quoted in the notes on line 89.

184. haunted spring. Comp. L'Alleg. 130, Il Pens. 137 and 154, "unseen Genius of the wood"; Com. 267; Lyc. 183, "the Genius of the shore"; Par. Lost, i. 783, iii. 27.

185. poplar pale. The silver-poplar (in Horace, alba pōpūlus).

186. parting, departing. Comp. Par. Lost, viii. 630, "the parting sun"; ib. xii. 589, "The hour precise exacts our parting hence." See Nares' Glossary for other illustrative passages (e.g. 'timely-parted' = lately dead), and index to Globe Spenser (part = depart; parture = departure).

188. Comp. Il Pens. 133, 137, 154.

189. consecrated: see note on 'sacred,' Lyc. 102.

191. Lars and Lemures. Line 189 refers to the latter, and line 190 to the former. See Leigh Hunt's Essay on the Household Gods of the Ancients: "The Lares or Lars were the lesser and most familiar household gods; and though their offices were afterwards extended a good deal, in the same way as those of the Penates (gods of the house and family), with whom they are often wrongly confounded, their principal sphere was the fireplace. This was in the middle of the room, and the statues of the Lares generally stood about it in little niches. They are said to have been in the shape of monkeys; more likely mannikins, or rude little human images. ... Some writers make them the offspring of the goddess Mania, who presided over the spirits of the dead; and suppose that originally they were the same as those spirits; which is a very probable as well as agreeable superstition, the old nations of Italy having been accustomed to bury their dead in their houses. Upon this supposition, the good or benevolent spirits were called Familiar Lares and the evil or malignant ones, Larvae and Lemures." Milton seems here to refer to Lemures in the same sense as Ovid, viz., shades, ghosts of the dead, Lat. manes.

192. round: prep. governing 'altars.'

194. Flamens: Roman priests devoted to the service of a particular deity. quaint, precise. In modern English it means odd or curious, and in Milton's poetry it usually conveys the idea of strangeness as well as of exactness or nicety. The word is from Lat. cognitus, known or remarkable, and Chaucer has it in the sense of 'famous'; hence 'skilful' and 'cunning' (in a good sense); hence 'cunning' (in a bad sense), as in The Plowman's Crede (1394), "the devell is full queynte." In French it became coint, which was treated as if from Lat. comptus, neat, ingenious, and hence acquired the sense of 'pretty' or 'neat,' as in Temp. i. 2. 317, "My quaint Ariel." Comp. Arc. 47, Lyc. 139, notes.

195. chill marble ... sweat. Dunster refers to Georgics i. 480, for the prodigies at the death of Caesar: "the ivory in the fanes sheds tears for sorrow, and the brass sweats."

196. forgoes, etc. In this line 'peculiar' = special. 'Forgoes' = gives up: it is often written 'foregoes,' owing to confusion of the verbs. The prefix for- (seen in forbear, forbid, forget, forgive, forlorn, forsake, forswear) has the sense of from or is an intensive (cf. Ger. ver).

197. Compare the catalogue of fallen angels in Par. Lost, i. 376-521. Peor; i.e. Baal-Peor, or the Baal of Peor (Num. xxiii. 28; xxv. 3, 18; Josh. xxii. 17). Milton follows Jerome, who identifies Chemos (see Par. Lost, i. 405) with Baal-Peor and the Greek Priapus. Baalim: see Judges, viii. 33, 1 Sam. vii. 4; 2 Chron. xxviii. 2, etc.; also Par. Lost, i. 422, "Baalim and Ashtaroth, those male, these feminine." The Baal of the Phoenicians here referred to is the Sungod, the Baal (Heb. ba'al, lord; plur. baalim) or lord of the heavens: the Baals of different tribes or sanctuaries were not necessarily regarded as identical, so that in the Bible we find frequent mention of "the Baalim." As the principle of life he was worshipped as Baal-Peor, and other aspects are marked by such names as Baal-zebub, Ish-bosheth (where bosheth = 'shameful thing,' substituted for 'Baal'), etc.

199. twice-batter'd god. See Par. Lost, i. 462, "Dagon his name, sea monster, upward man And downward fish!" Sams. Agon. 437, 468; 1 Sam. v. 3, where allusion is made to Dagon's twice falling before the ark of God. Palestine: Dagon was a national god of the Philistines, who have given their name to Palestine (comp. the transfer of the name 'Asia' from a small district of Lydia to a whole continent).

200. moonéd Ashtaroth, etc. Ashtoreth, Ashtaroth or As-tarte, goddess of the Sidonians and Philistines, whose worship was introduced among the Israelites during the period of the Judges (Judg. ii. 13, 1 Sam. vii. 4). The name is properly a plural, and in the Old Testament is sometimes associated with the plural Baalim. On this account some (including Milton, Par. Lost, i. 422) would identify Baal with the male principle of life and Ashtaroth with Ashera, the female principle among the Syrians and others. But Ashera was an impure deity, while Ashtaroth is not so represented. "The key to this difficulty is probably to be sought in the Assyrian mythology, where we find that the planet Venus was worshipped as the chaste goddess Istar, when she appeared as a morning star, and as the impure Bilit or Beltis, Mylitta of Herod. (i. 199), when she was an evening star. These two goddesses, associated yet contrasted, seem to correspond respectively to the chaste Ashtoreth and the foul Ashera, though the distinction between the rising and setting planet was not kept up among the Western Semites, and the nobler deity came at length to be viewed as the goddess of the moon" (Ency. Brit. iii.). Milton here regards her as goddess of the moon (see Par. Lost, vi. 978), though the Greek goddess Astarte was identified with Aphrodite or Venus (see Com. 1002, "Assyrian Queen").

201. Heaven's queen, etc. She is so called in Jcrem. xlv. 25, "to burn incense to the queen of heaven." Newton says, 'She was called regina coeli and mater Deum' (Selden's De Diis Syriis).

202. tapers' holy shine, i.e. on her altars. On 'taper,' see note L'Alleg. 125. 'Shine' = lustre, as in sun-shine, moon-shine: the use of 'shine' as a subst. is found in Spenser, Shakespeare, Jonson, Dryden, and others; comp. F. Q. i. x. 67, "passing brightness ... and too exceeding shyne"; Ven. and Adon. "her silver shine"; Jonson's Cynth. Rev. "a heart with shine about it." See Nares' Glossary under shine and sheen.

203. Libyc Hammon, i.e. the Libyan or Aethiopian god Ammon, called by the Greeks Zeus Ammon and by the Romans Jupiter Ammon. See Par. Lost, iv. 276, "Old Cham (=Ham, son of Noah) whom Gentiles Ammon call and Libyan Jove." The reference to his horn shows that Milton is thinking of that type of Ammon with which the later Greek and Roman writers were most familiar, which connected him with the ram-headed god Khnum or Chnoumis, the spirit of the waters; and perhaps the poet does not clearly distinguish him from Apis, the bull-god, whose name, like that of Ammon, means 'the hidden god.' The classical writers regarded the horns of Ammon as significant of his office as protector of the flocks, the Aethiopians being a nomadic people. It is probable that the worship of Ammon was introduced from Egypt into Aethiopia; he was worshipped at Meroë in Aethiopia, Thebes, and Ammonium. On his conquest of Egypt, Alexander the Great called himself the son of Ammon, and his portraits show him wearing the ram's horn.

shrinks; used transitively: see Lyc. 133, note.

204. Thammuz. Comp. Par. Lost, i. 446, "Thammuz came next behind, Whose annual wound in Lebanon allured the Syrian damsels to lament his fate"; and Com. 999, "Where young Adonis oft reposes," etc. These two passages show that Thammuz was identified with Adonis, and Astarte with Venus. Keightley, in his Mythology, says: "The tale of Adonis is evidently an eastern myth ... He appears to be the same with the Thammuz mentioned by the prophet Ezekiel (viii. 14), and to be a Phœnician personification of the sun, who during part of the year is absent, or, as the legend expresses it, with the goddess of the under world: during the remainder with Astarte, the regent of heaven." The mourning of the Tyrian maids is an allusion to the anniversary ceremonies held in Syria and round the Mediterranean to perpetuate the memory of Venus's grief for Adonis, who died of a wound received from a wild boar. On the myths of Adonis and Ammon see Frazer's Golden Bough, i. 3. 4; ii. 3. 12.

205. sullen Moloch: comp. Par. Lost, i. 392, "Moloch, horrid king, besmear'd with blood Of human sacrifice and parent's tears," etc. Moloch or Molech or Milchôm, the national god of the Ammonites, to whom children were offered up in sacrifice (see Psalms, cvi. 38, Jer. vii. 31, Ezek. xvi. 20, 2 Kings, iii. 27, Lev. xx. 1-5). In the Old Testament there seems to be some confusion between Moloch and Baal: see especially Jer. xxxii. 35, and ib. xix. 5, where the names are used as if interchangeable, and human sacrifices are ascribed to both. Classical writers have identified Moloch with Saturn. Warton quotes from Sandys' Travels, a book popular in Milton's time: "Wherein [the valley of Tophet] the Hebrews sacrificed their children to Moloch: an idol of brass, having the head of a calf, the rest of a kingly figure with arms extended to receive the miserable sacrifice, scared to death with his burning embracements. For the idol was hollow within, and filled with fire. And lest their lamentable shrieks should sad the hearts of their parents, the priests of Moloch did deaf their ears with the continual clangs of trumpets and timbrels." Milton here pictures Moloch fleeing from his own altar at the moment of Christ's birth and while his worshippers were in the act of sacrificing to him. The priests danced round the fire, and endeavoured to recall their god.

207. all: see note, Il Pens. 33.

208. cymbals' ring: the clash of the cymbals in which the cries of the victims were drowned; see note, l. 128.

209. grisly. Radically the same as grue-some = horrible, causing terror (comp. Ger. grausig, causing horror; graus, horror). In Par. Lost. iv. 821, Satan is called "the grisly king"; comp. Com. 603, "all the grisly legions," and see index, Globe Spenser; 'grieslie,' 'grisely.'

210. dance: comp. Macbeth, Act iv.

211. brutish. In direct allusion to their form. "The distinguishing peculiarity of the ancient Egyptian religion, with respect to worship, is the adoration of sacred animals as emblems of the gods ... The most celebrated of these were the bulls Apis at Memphis and Mnevis at Heliopolis, both sacred to Osiris, though some say the latter was sacred to the sun." The crocodile was sacred to Sebak, the jackal and probably more than one allied species to Anubis; the cat to Pasht, and so with innumerable animals. The gods of Egypt are referred to in Juvenal's 15th Satire, in Herod. ii, and in Lucian's De Sacr. Comp. Par. Lost. i. 477: "A crew who under names of old renown, Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train, With monstrous shapes, and sorceries abused Fanatic Egypt and her priests, to seek Their wandering gods disguised in brutish forms Rather than human."

212. Isis, the consort of Osiris and mother of Horus. At first the goddess of the earth, and afterwards of the moon: then identified by the Greeks with Demeter and the Argive Io. Her worship prevailed extensively in Greece, and was introduced into Rome in the time of Sulla. In the public processions those initiated in her mysteries wore masks representing dogs' heads: see Smith's Class. Dict. and Ency. Britt., article 'Egypt.' Spenser, F. Q. v. 7, says "They wore rich mitres shaped like the moon To show that Iris doth the moon portend, Like as Osiris signifies the sun." See Frazer's Golden Bough, vol. i. chap. 3, § 6, on Osiris and Isis.

Orus ... Anubis. The children of Osiris and Isis were Orus (=Horus or Har) and Anubis or Anup. The former was represented as 'hawk-headed,' the latter as 'jackal-headed.' Horus assisted his father Osiris in judging the dead, while Anubis had the duty of weighing the souls of the departed and of presiding over funeral rites. He is also sometimes called the sun-god: comp. Virgil's Æn. viii. 698.

213. Osiris. Milton here identifies Osiris, long regarded as the sun-god and the Nile-god and the most celebrated deity in the Egyptian Pantheon, with Apis the bull-god, respectfully following the classical writers, (e.g. Juvenal, Satires, viii. 29). This identification was due to the fact that the bull, worshipped at that time as a divinity, came to be regarded as a symbol. In ll. 216-7 Milton alludes to the legend that Osiris, originally king of Egypt, had been, on his return from travels in foreign lands, murdered by his brother Typhon, who cut his body into pieces and threw them into the Nile. After long search Isis discovered them, and defeated Typhon with the aid of her son Horus. Mr. Palgrave's note is as follows:—Osiris, the Egyptian god of Agriculture (here perhaps by confusion with Apis, figured as a Bull), was torn to pieces by Typho and embalmed after death in a sacred chest. This mythe, reproduced in Syria and Greece in the legends of Thammuz, Adonis, and perhaps Absyrtus, may have originally signified the annual death of the Sun or the Year under the influences of the winter darkness. Horus, the son of Osiris, as the New Year, in his turn overcomes Typhon.

214. Memphian grove. After the fall of Thebes, Memphis became the capital of Egypt: it contained the splendid temple of the bull-god Apis.

215. unshower'd: in allusion to the small rain-fall of Egypt, a country which is watered by the Nile's overflow. with: comp. Lyc. 29, note.

217. chest, ark (as in line 220). Comp. Henryson's Moral Fables, 8: "The cheese in Arke and meill in Kist." Chaucer has chest in the sense of coffin (comp. Gr. κόφινος, a chest): "He is now ded and nailed in his chest," Prol. to Clerk's Tale. On 'sacred' (= 'worshipt' in l. 220), comp. note, Lyc. 102.

218. shroud: see note, Lyc. 22, "my sable shroud."

219. timbrell'd anthems, anthems sung to the accompaniment of the timbrel. 'Timbrel,' a dimin. from M.E. timbre, cognate with Lat. tympanum, a drum. Comp. Exod. xv. 20; and Pope's line, "Let weeping Nilus hear the timbrel sound," Trans. of 1st Thebaid of Statius. On 'anthem,' see Il Pens. 163, note.

220. sable-stoléd. On 'stole,' see note, Il Pens. 35, and comp. 'sable-vested' (Gk. κυανόστολος) in Par. Lost, ii. 962. worshipt: see note on 'kist,' line 65.

221. Comp. Isaiah, xix. 1, "Behold, the Lord rideth upon a swift cloud, and cometh unto Egypt; and the idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence, and the heart of Egypt shall melt in the midst of it."

223. eyn. There were a large number of plurals in en in Old English, only one of which (oxen) is now in common use as a plural, though others are now used as singulars (welkin, chicken, etc.). Chaucer has the form yē, plur. yēn, commonly written eye, eyen: Spenser frequently uses eyen=O.E. eagan, Prov. Eng. een; and foen=O.E. fan, fon, foes (see Morris, § 80). Shakespeare (Ant. and Cleop. ii. 7. 121) has eyne=eyes, and shoon=shoes (Ham. iv. 5). Comp. doughteren, sistren, assen, been, etc., all found in old writers: kine, children, and brethren are double plurals.

224. beside, besides, other: see note, Il Pens. 116.

226. Typhon: the Egyptian god, Set, called by the Greeks Typhon, was a brother of Osiris: he is represented sometimes with the head of a fabulous monster, sometimes as a crocodile, etc. For the use of 'twine,' comp. Com. 105.

227. Our Babe, etc. The allusion is explained by the story of the infant Hercules strangling, in his cradle, the two serpents sent by Hera to destroy him.

228. crew: see note, L'Alleg. 38.

229. So: in the same way. Comp. Cowley's Hymn to Light, 41, "When, Goddess, thou lift'st up thy wakened head, Out of the Morning's purple bed," etc.

231. Pillows ... wave. Comp. Shelley's Lines written in the Euganean Hills:

"Lo! the sun upsprings behind,
Broad, red, radiant, half-reclined
On the level quivering line
Of the waters crystalline."

Also Par. Reg. iv. 426; Il Pens. 121.

orient, bright. The Lat. oriens=rising; hence (from being applied to the sun)=eastern (Com. l. 30); and hence generally 'bright' or 'shining': comp. Com. 65, Par. Lost, i. 546.

232. flocking shadows, etc. Comp. M. N. D. iii. 2,

"Yonder shines Aurora's harbinger,
At whose approach ghosts, wandering here and there,
Troop home to churchyards," etc.

See further, L'Alleg. 49, note; Hamlet, i. 5. 89-91.

234. his several grave, i.e. his separate or particular grave. Radically 'several' is from the verb 'sever' (Lat. separo) and in this sense could be used with singular nouns: comp. Much Ado, v. 3. 29, Shak. Sonnet, 137, Comus, 25. It was also used as a subst.=an individual, an enclosed place, etc.; and the adverb had the sense of 'separately' or 'privately': comp. Jul. Caesar,

iii. 2. 10, "severally we hear them." In the modern sense of 'various,' 'divers,' 'sundry,' the adj. is used only with plural nouns, and cannot stand as a subst. See Abbott, § 61; Morris, § 249; and Nares' Glossary. On 'his' = its, see notes, ll. 106, 139.

235. fays, fairies. Strictly 'fay' (Fr. fée, an elf) is the personal name, while the derivative 'fairy' is an abstract noun = enchantment: the latter, though at first wrongly used, has now nearly displaced the former. See Keightley's Fairy Mythology. 'Yellow-skirted': yellow is a colour widely associated with enchantment.

236. night-steeds. Comp. Com. 553, "The drowsy frightened steeds that draw the litter of close-curtained sleep:" also Par. Lost, ii. 662. Shakespeare alludes frequently to the dragons that draw Night's chariot (M. N. D. iii. 2. 379, Cym. ii. 2, Tro. and Cress. v. 9) and to night as the time for fairies and ghosts (Ham. iii. 2; M. N. D. v. 2; ib. ii. 1). See also Il Pens. 59, note.

moon-loved maze; intricacies of their moon-light dance. Comp. M. N. D. ii. 1. 141, "If you will patiently dance in our round, And see our moon-light revels, go with us"; and Par. Lost, i. 781, "fairy elves Whose midnight revels ... Some belated peasant sees, ... While overhead the moon Sits arbitress."

238. Hath: see note, L'Alleg. 108.

239. Time is, etc., = 'It is time that,' etc.

240. youngest-teemed = last born or 'latest born': comp. 'later born,' Sonnet to Lady Mar. Ley. The allusion is to the Star in the East (see lines 19 and 23, notes).

241. fixed ... car: the star remained fixed over the spot where Christ lay at Bethlehem. 'Polished' = bright: comp. Com. 95, "the gilded car of day."

242. hand-maid lamp. Dunster thinks the allusion is to the parable of the Ten Virgins, Matt. xxv.: comp. Milton's Sonn. to a Virtuous Young Lady, "Thy care is fixed and zealously attends To fill thy odorous lamp with deeds of light."

243. courtly stable. The stable where the kings from the East did homage to the Prince of Peace.

244. Bright harness'd, clad in shining armour. In old books 'harness' almost always means body-armour for soldiers: comp. 1 Kings, xx. 11; Chaucer's Cant. Tales, 1615, "harness right enough for thee" (said to a knight); Macbeth, v. 5. 52, "At least we'll die with harness on our back;" Par. Lost, vii. 202, "harnessed at hand" (applied to an equipage).

serviceable, ready to serve. Comp. King Lear, iv. 6. 257; and Son. on his Blindness, "They also serve who only stand and wait."

SONG ON MAY MORNING.

This piece is generally assigned to the first of May, 1630. In the edition of 1645 Milton placed it before the lines On Shakespeare, and its bright allusions to the spring-time of external nature and of human life come fitly from the young Cambridge student. The varied rhythm of the song gives sure evidence of Milton's "divine ear" for metrical art. The trochaic effect prevails in the lines in which May is welcomed; compare the welcome to Mirth and Melancholy in L'Allegro and Il Penseroso respectively. The contemplative side of Milton's youth does not here reveal itself; we see rather the spirit of those days

"When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns Brisk as the April buds in primrose season."

Comus, 670.

1. morning-star. The planet Venus, as the morning-star, was called Phosphorus or Lucifer (the light-bringer), and, as the evening-star, Hesperus. Hence Tennyson's allusion—

"Bright Phosphor, fresher for the night, Sweet Hesper-Phosphor, double name."

In Memoriam.

In Comus 93, it is the "star that bids the shepherd's fold," and in Lyc. 30, "the star that rose at evening bright." In the last of these passages the pronoun his is applied to the star; in this poem (line 2) her is used. This is in allusion to the planet as Venus, fit companion for the flowery May.

harbinger, forerunner. This is the current sense of the word; radically, it means 'harbourer,' one who goes before another and prepares a 'harbour' or lodging for him (M.E. herbergeour). The origin of the word is disguised by the intrusion of the letter n, as in messenger from 'message,' porringer from 'porridge,' etc.

2. Comes dancing from the east. Compare Spenser's Astrophel, iv. : 'The dancing day, forthcoming from the east.' Dancing is in adverbial relation to comes.

2. leads with her : compare the language of L'Allegro, 35.

3. flow'ry May, etc. Compare Son. i. 4; also Spenser's Faerie Queene, 'On Mutability,' vii. 34 :

"Then came fair May, the fairest maid on ground, . . .
And throwing flowers out of her lap around."

4. yellow cowslip. In Lyc. 147, it is "the cowslip wan," where the epithet is suited to the context. In Comus, 898, we have "the cowslip's velvet head."

pale primrose. In Comus 671 (see above) Spring is called "the primrose season." For the explanation of the epithet pale, see Lyc. 142 and note.

5. that dost inspire Mirth, etc., i.e. that fillest us with mirth, etc. Compare Spenser, On Mutability, vii. (in allusion to May):

"Lord ! how all creatures laughed when her they spied
And leapt and danced as they had ravished been !
And Cupid's self about her fluttered all in green."

inspire = breathe in : comp. Son. xx. 6, note.

7. of thy dressing, i.e. dressed by thee. Compare such phrases as 'of thy doing' = done by thee.

8. Hill and dale doth boast thy blessing, i.e. the hills and the dales rejoice because you have blessed them. Hill and dale are used generically, and the verb is singular because it is to be supplied with each of the nouns : but see also note on Son. xiii. 5. Boast is here used transitively.

9. Thus, i.e. in these words : "this is the form which our early song of salutation takes."

10. And welcome thee : compare Chaucer, Knights Tale—

"O May, with all thy flowers and thy green, Right welcome be thou, fair fresh May."

wish thee long, i.e. wish thee to be long or remain long with us.

ON SHAKESPEARE.

These lines were written in 1630, when Milton was twenty-two years of age. They were printed anonymously among the commendatory verses prefixed to the second folio of Shakespeare (1632) under the title "An Epitaph on the Admirable Dramatic Poet, W. Shakespeare." The poem may have been occasioned by some proposal to erect a monument to Shakespeare ; it is more probable, however, that it was specially written for the folio.

1. What needs, etc. Here 'what' is equivalent to 'for what' or 'why' : earlier versions read "what need."

Comp. "What need we any spur but our own cause ?"

Julius Cæsar, ii. 1. 123.

In Elizabethan English need is often found with what, and in such cases it is sometimes difficult to say whether 'what' is an adverb and 'need' a verb, or 'what' an adjective and 'need' a noun.

" What need the bridge much broader than the flood ? "

M. Ado, i. 1. 318.

Either " Why need the bridge (be) broader ? " or " What need is there (that) the bridge (be) broader ? " (Abbott's Shakespearian Grammar, § 297).

2. The labour of an age. The Pyramids of Egypt are monuments that may well be described thus ; see 1. 4.

3. Or that his, etc., the construction is, ' What needs Shakespeare that his hallowed reliques should,' etc.

hallowed, sacred.

reliques, remains. This is now commonly written relics (Lat. reliquiae, remains).

4. star-ypointing, i.e., rising far into the heavens. For the form ypointing, see note L'Alleg. 12 ; in the very earliest stages of the language the prefix ge was not confined to the past participle, being found along with the infinite and the past tense. But ordinarily it belonged to the past participle, and Milton's use of it with a present participle is peculiar, though not without precedent. Comp. 'ychained,' N. O. 155.

5. son of memory. This may mean ' immortal poet,' or ' Muse ' (as in Lyc. 19), the muses being sometimes called ' daughters of Memory.'

heir of fame : this strengthens and also expands the sense of " son of memory." ' Heir of fame ' is one who inherits or possesses fame (Lat. heres, an heir or possessor). Comp. Lyc. 78, where it is said that the true poet cannot be deprived of his meed of fame.

6. What need'st thou : see note on 1. 1 ; the object of need'st is witness.

7. astonishment. As the strict sense of astonish is ' to stun,' i.e. to render incapable of thought or movement, the idea is the same as that expressed by 1. 14, and by Il Pens. 42, where see notes.

8. livelong. Milton first wrote lasting, which gives the meaning. The word is a form of life-long, but the usage of the two forms is now distinct. Lifelong means " lasting through life," while live-long merely indicates long continuance, without reference to any definite period. Comp. L'Alleg. 99.

9. slow-endeavouring, laborious. Milton has perhaps in these lines made a modest reference to his own fastidious mode of composition.

10. Thy easy numbers flow, i.e. thy numbers flow with ease. 'Numbers,' like the synonymous word rime (see note, Lyc. 11), is here used for verse. Compare Pope's lines on himself :

"As yet a child, nor yet a fool to fame,
I lisped in numbers, for the numbers came."

Milton alludes to Shakespeare's marvellous ease of composition : the editors of the first folio of Shakespeare said, "His mind and hand went together ; And what he thought he uttered with that easiness that we have scarce received from him a blot in his papers."

that each heart ; the construction is, 'whilst that each heart,' etc. In Elizabethan English the use of that as a conjunctive suffix is very common ; we find 'when that,' 'why that,' 'whilst that,' 'though that,' 'since that,' in all of which cases we should now omit that.

11. unvalued book, i.e. invaluable book. See note on L'Alleg. 40. Shakespeare has 'unvalued jewels' = jewels whose value cannot be estimated. Shelley, in the opposite sense of worthless, has 'unvalued stones' = stones having no value.

12. Delphic lines, i.e. oracular lines, as if spoken by the greatest of all oracles, viz., that in Apollo's temple at Delphi.

took, taken. This is a form of the past tense used as the past participle. Shakespeare has took for taken, shaked and shook for shaken, arose for arisen, etc. Comp. Arc. 4.

13. bereaving. The construction is, 'bereaving our fancy of itself,' i.e. in our efforts to follow your train of thought, we are carried out of ourselves ; we become monuments of your power. Compare Com. 260.

14. Dost make us marble, etc. ; we become as insensible as marble to all around us owing to our ecstatic delight in your works. Such testimony to your genius is a far grander monument than the marble tomb of an earthly king. Comp. Il Pens. 42 ; the same idea occurs in the common phrase, "to be petrified with astonishment."

15. sepulchred, entombed or commemorated. Comp. Shakespeare's Sonnet lxxxi :

"When you entombed in men's eyes shall lie,
Your monument shall be my gentle verse," etc.

The accent in 'sepulchred' is on the penult.

The poem is not a sonnet ; it consists simply of eight couplets.

ON THE UNIVERSITY CARRIER.

The two short pieces on this subject bring Milton before us in the mood of L'Allegro, who delights in "quips and cranks and wanton wiles." They were probably written in January, 1631, the date of Hobson's death.

Thomas Hobson was for more than sixty years the University carrier between Cambridge and the Bull's Inn, London; he carried letters, parcels, and sometimes passengers in his waggon. In 1630, owing to the Plague, the authorities forbade Hobson to continue his weekly journeys, and for eight or nine months the old man chafed under this enforced idleness. His health broke down, and when the Plague had abated, he was too ill to resume work. He sickened and died at the age of eighty-six. The witty language of Milton's verses is based chiefly on the analogy between Hobson's almost hum-drum existence and the course of life in general, and on the fact that the "Vacancy" seems to have been the immediate cause of his death. His memory is kept alive not only in Milton's lines, but also in the well-known saying, "Hobson's choice"—an adaptation of an older phrase, 'Hodgson's choice,' which is found as early as 1617, fourteen years before Hobson's death (see Weekley, Romance of Words).

1. girt, girth or girdle: all cognate words. The quibbles in the first four lines turn on Hobson's likeness to a horse that has stuck in the mire, and in its struggles has fallen and broken its girth.

3. twenty to one. Here to seems to have the force of "in comparison with"; 'twenty to one' is used to indicate a high degree of probability. Comp. Abbott, § 187.

4. slough, hollow filled with mud, a mire.

5. 'Twas, familiar idiom for 'he was.' The meaning is that the carrier had so continually shifted from place to place that Death, though it had been 'dodging with' him for ten years, had been unable until now to overtake him.

8. Dodged with. 'To dodge' is to move quickly hither and thither; 'to dodge with' another is to follow in his track.

10. carriage, carrying. The whole line is a conditional clause.

13. ta'en up his latest inn, taken up his final abode.

14. The sense is: 'Death, kindly performing the duties of a chamberlain or attendant at an inn, pointed out to him the room he was to occupy,' etc.

Coleridge writes: "I confess that I have read these Hobsons 20 times, and always with amusement, without the least injury to the higher and very different delight afforded by Milton's poetry."

ANOTHER ON THE SAME.

3. 'It was so ordained, that he should not die while he,' etc.

4. might, was able to, could. This is the original sense of the word, which is the past tense of may (A.S. mugan, to be able).

5. Made of sphere-metal, i.e. made of the same metal as the heavenly spheres whose motion is perpetual. Hobson's "revolutions" were between Cambridge and London.

6. was at stay, i.e. had come to a stop.

7. 'Motion is estimated in time, but (on the contrary) Hobson's time (i.e. life) was estimated in motion (i.e. in the journeys he made).'

9. engine, machine: see note, Lyc. 130.

10. His principles, i.e. principles of motion, moving forces.

straight, straightway. In modern English straight is still used as an adverb, as 'He went straight to the point'; but to indicate time the adverb straightway (compounded of a noun and an adjective) is employed. Straight is radically equivalent to 'stretched or drawn out.'

12. breathing. In the same way we speak of a time of leisure as a "breathing-space."

14. vacation ... term. These are University terms punningly applied to Hobson's period of idleness and to the term (Lat. terminus) or allotted period of his life.

15. 'He sickened in order to have something to do.'

16. quickened, revived: A.S. cwic, living.

20. The construction is: 'I vow that if I, the carrier, am put down, I will make six bearers,' i.e. six men will be required to carry me to the grave.

21. Ease ... disease. 'Disease' = want of ease.

22. He died for heaviness ... light, i.e. he died from heaviness of spirit because he was no longer able to load his cart.

'For' = because of; see Abbott, § 149, for examples of this use of for. 'That' = because: "since that represents different cases of the relative, it may mean 'in that,' 'for that,' 'because' (quod), or 'at which time' (quum)."
Abbott, § 284.

25. 'So that (as some say) he continued to the very last to cry "More weight," as if he were being pressed to death.' There was a mode of torture by which the victim was pressed to death, his sufferings being terminated by 'more weight.'

25. be : on this indicative use of be, see note, Epit. on M. of W 55, and Abbott, § 300.

28. He had been, i.e. he would have been.

29. Obedient to the moon. As he made four journeys every month, his course was, like that of the tides, governed by the moon.

32. wain ... increase. A pun on the two identical sounds—wain, a waggon or cart, and wane, decrease, applied to the moon in her third and fourth quarters.

33. His letters, i.e. the letters which he had been entrusted to deliver.

34. superscription, i.e. Milton's own verses.

AN EPITAPH ON THE MARCHIONESS OF WINCHESTER.

This piece, in the metre of L'Allegro and Il Penseroso, was probably written immediately after the death of the Marchioness in 1631. She was the first wife of the fifth Marquis of Winchester, and died in child-birth at the age of 23. The poet-laureate, Ben Jonson, and others lamented her death in verse.

1. inter, hold the remains of. This is a peculiar use of the word : when used actively its subject is generally a person or persons, not an inanimate object.

3. A Viscount's daughter. She was the daughter of Viscount Savage.

an Earl's heir. Her mother had been the eldest daughter and one of the heirs of Thomas Darcy, Earl of Rivers.

4. Besides what, etc. The sense is, 'She was a Viscount's daughter, and an Earl's heir, in addition to all that her virtues added to these earthly honours.' 'Besides,' a preposition, is here a trisyllable.

6. More than, etc. This line is explanatory of what in line 4.

7. Summers three times eight, etc. In prosaic language, 'She was twenty-three years of age.' Dante and Spenser delight in these round-about ways of measuring time.

8. told, counted : see note, L'Alleg. 67, on this use of tell.

alas ! too soon, etc. This and the two succeeding lines are attributive : "She, who, alas ! was too soon to dwell with darkness and with death." 'With darkness and with death' may be regarded as an example of hendiadys, being equivalent to 'in the dark tomb.'

12. her praise, i.e. praise of her, her fame. Comp. Lyc. 76.

13. Nature and Fate, etc.; 'Nature and Fate would not then have disagreed,' i.e. she would have died in the ordinary course of Nature.

16. a lover meet, i.e. a husband worthy of her.

17. The virgin quire, etc.: 'the bride's maids having called upon Hymen, that god appeared; but his torch burned dimly, and in the marriage wreath which he carried a cypress bud might have been noticed.' See note on Hymen, L'Alleg. 125.

quire: a band of singers. This is another spelling of choir (Lat. chorus). The chorus of the Greek drama was a singing as well as a dancing body; it was supposed to represent the sentiments of the audience. Quire, a collection of sheets of paper, is a distinct word, which is variously derived from O.F. quaier, a small written book, and from Lat. quatuor, four.

22. a cypress-bud; an omen that the marriage would speedily be followed by a funeral. Cypress garlands were carried at funerals: the name of the tree is said to be derived from Cyprus (comp. note, Il Pens. 35).

23. Once had, etc. She had already had a son, afterwards the sixth Marquis of Winchester.

24. To greet her of, etc., i.e. to salute or congratulate her as the mother of a lovely son. 'Of': this preposition is thus frequently used in Elizabethan English to indicate the circumstances of an action, and may be rendered by 'concerning' or 'about' or 'on account of.' Abbott, § 174.

26. calls Lucina. Lucina was the Roman goddess who presided over child-birth; her name denotes 'the bringer to light.' Compare Spenser, F. Q. II. i., liii:

"And bade me call Lucina to be near.
Lucina came: a man-child forth I brought."

28. Atropos, etc., i.e. Atrōpos, one of the Fates, who cuts the thread of life, came instead of Lucina: see notes, Arc. 65-69, Lyc. 75.

30. at once, i.e. at one and the same time.

fruit and tree, child and mother.

31. hapless: unfortunate. The student should note how words like happy, lucky, fortunate, which strictly refer to a person's hap, whether good or bad, have been restricted to good hap: in order to give them an unfavourable meaning a negative prefix or suffix is used.

33. languished, exhausted. Comp. Com. 743:

“ If you let slip time, like a neglected rose,
It withers on the stalk with languished head ”:

also Par. Lost, vi. 496. The suffix -ed is frequently used in Elizabethan English where we now have -ing (Abbott, § 374).

35. slip, a small branch or twig.

36. Saved ... nip: comp. Sams. Agon. 1576--

... “ the first-born bloom of spring
Nipt with the lagging rear of winter's frost.

37. pride of her carnation train, i.e. the pride of the whole garden, the pride of the flowers surrounding the tender slip. On ‘train’ see Il Pens. 10, note; ‘carnation’ is the name of a particular flower, perhaps originally ‘coronation’ (Lat. corona), but later confused with ‘carnation’ (Lat. caro, flesh).

38. unheedy, unheeding, careless. Compare Shakespeare, “ Wings and no eyes figure unheedy haste.”

M. N. D. i. 1. 237.

The suffix -y also occurs where we should now use the present participle in ‘slumbry agitation,’ Macbeth, v. 1. 237.

43. those pearls of dew, etc. ‘Those pearly dew-drops which rest upon the fair blossom prove to be tears shed by the morning as a presage of its speedy death.’

The comparison of dew-drops to tears is frequent in poetry: comp. Chesterfield's Advice:

“ Those tears of the sky for the loss of the sun.”

46. hastening funeral, speedy death. The Latin funus = death.

49. this thy travail: ‘this’ and ‘travail’ are in apposition.

50. seize, possess, give possession of. This is a legal sense of the word: comp. lease, l. 52.

51. That, etc. The construction is, ‘(You) who, in order to give the world increase, have shortened your own life.’

55. be, are. This use of be in the indicative is frequent in Elizabethan English, especially with a plural nominative and after where, there, here, etc. It is used with reference to a number of persons or things, regarded as a class. Comp. Com. 12, 519, 668.

tears of perfect moan. ‘Perfect moan’ = sincere or great sorrow : 'perfect' has its original sense of 'complete,' as in line 73 of Comus, "so perfect is their misery."

56. Weept, wept : another form of the participle. See note, L'Alleg. 105.

Helicon, a mountain in Boeotia sacred to the Muses : the tears wept in Helicon are the elegiac verses of the various poets who lamented the death of the Marchioness ; comp. Lyc. 14, "melodious tear."

57. And some flowers ... Came. The construction is 'And here are some flowers,' etc. The flowers and bays referred to are the verses written by Milton (and perhaps by other Cambridge men). The Came is the river Cam ; see Lyc. 103. The bay or laurel was sacred to Apollo, the god of song.

58. For thy hearse to strew the ways, i.e. to strew the ways for thy hearse. Some editors suggest 'fore thy hearse.'

'Hearse' does not here denote 'tomb,' as in line 151 of Lycidas ; it may be rendered 'bier.' See note, Lyc. 151.

60. Devoted to, dedicated to.

61. bright Saint : comp. Lyc. 172-181.

62. much like to thee in story, whose story closely resembles yours.

63. fair Syrian shepherdess : an allusion to Rachel, the wife of Jacob and the mother of Joseph. Like the Marchioness, she died at the birth of her second child. See Genesis, xxix., xxx., xxxv.

66. served for her before. Jacob served Laban seven years in order to obtain his daughter Rachel to wife ; he was, however, deceived into marrying her sister Leah, and had to serve other seven years before he was allowed to marry Rachel.

68. Through pangs fled to felicity : the pangs of child-birth caused her death, and thereby enabled her to enter upon the joys of heaven. Comp. Spenser F. Q. II. i. lvi.

"And ended all her woe in quiet death."

On this line Dunster says : 'We cannot too much admire the beauty of this line. I wish it had closed the poem, which it would have done with singular effect.'

72. Like fortunes, etc., i.e. similar fortunes may make her soul acquainted with thee.

73. With thee there clad, etc., i.e. with thee who in heaven art clad in dazzling splendour. Sheen is cognate with show : comp. Comus, 893.

74. Marchioness and Queen are in apposition to thee.

ON TIME.

This piece, probably written about the beginning of 1633, bears in Milton's draft the following title—On Time : to be set on a Clock-case. It was formerly a common practice to print on the faces of clocks such sentiments as Tempus fugit (time flies).

1. envious Time ; comp. Son. ii. 1, "Time, the subtle thief of youth."

2. leaden-stepping, tedious. An adjective formed, as it were, from a previous compound noun "leaden-step. Comp. the form of the adjective "rushy-fringed." Com. 890.

3. the heavy plummet's pace. A 'plummet' is a leaden weight: the word is cognate with 'plumb' (Fr. plomb, lead). The poet refers to the weights in a clock which descend very slowly.

4. And glut thyself, etc. As in l. 9, Time is represented as devouring all the transitory vanities of this world ; afterwards, only Eternity and all things truly good will remain.

9. when as : as is a conjunctive suffix. See note, On Shak. 10.

12. individual, indivisible, inseparable. This is the sense of the Latin individuus : it is frequent in Milton. See Par. Lost, iv. 486, "an individual solace."

14. sincerely, perfectly ; see Com. 454, "When a soul is found sincerely so," etc. ; also Epitaph on M. of W. 55.

18. happy-making sight : "the plain English of beatific vision" (Newton). The phrase 'to whose happy-making sight' depends on 'climb.' Comp. Par. Lost. i. 684.

20. quit, freed from all this earthly grossness. The word is originally an adjective and is so used here : from it comes the verb 'to quit' = to be quit or freed.

21. Attired, crowned. The head-dresses of Elizabethan ladies were called 'attires,' and to attire oneself was to put on the headdress : see note, Lyc. 146.

22. Those who gain eternal life are said to triumph over Death, Chance, and Time. Compare Par. Lost, iii. 338.

"And after all their tribulations long
See golden days, fruitful of golden deeds,
With Joy and Love triumphing, and fair Truth."

AT A SOLEMN MUSIC.

This ode was probably written by Milton before he left Cambridge.

1. Sirens : see note, Arcades, 63.

pledges : children ; see note, Lyc. 107.

2. Sphere-born : see note, Nat. Ode, l. 125, and compare Arcades, 63, note.

The allusion is to the Pythagorean notion of the music or harmony of the spheres, called by Tennyson, in Parnassus, "the great sphere-music of stars and constellations" ; comp. M. of V. v. 60-65 ; Twelfth Night, iii. 1. 121 ; Comus, 977 ; Lyc. 180.

Voice and Verse : comp. Par. Lost, ii. 556, "For eloquence the soul, song charms the sense." Verse rhymes with pierce as in L'Allegro, 138.

3. Wed, etc. : comp. L'Alleg. 137 and note, "soft Lydian airs Married to immortal verse."

5. high-raised phantasy. Here 'phantasy' is used in the wide sense of Imagination, and the effect of the music upon the exalted imagination is to "bring all Heaven before our eyes."

6. concent, harmony, Lat. concentus. This is to be distinguished from consent, i.e. agreement, used in Il Pens. 95 ; see note there.

7. sapphire-colour'd : comp. the account of "the empyreal Heaven" in Par. Lost, ii. 1049, "With opal towers and battlements adorned Of living sapphire" ; also Par. Lost, vi. 758.

10. Seraphim. The word is from Hebrew seraph, to burn ; hence the epithets 'bright,' 'burning.'

12. Cherubic : see note, Nat. Ode, 112. Milton uses this epithet six times in his poems, and habitually distinguishes cherubs from seraphs : see Par. Lost, i. 324 ; vii. 198.

18. noise : see notes, Il Pens. 61, Nat. Ode, 97. In our sinful state we cannot 'answer' to the heavenly music, "which none can hear Of human mould with gross unpurged ear."

20. chime, harmony : compare Nat. Ode, 128, note, and Comus, 1021. Chime is from Lat. cymbalum.

22. motion : comp. Arc. 71, "And the low world in measured motion draw After the heavenly tune."

23. diapason : octave or compass, "the diapason closing full in Man," Dryden, Song for St. Cecilia's Day.

27. consort, harmony : see notes, Nat. Ode, 132 ; Il Pens. 145.

L'ALLEGRO AND IL PENSEROSO.

These titles are Italian and may be translated 'the cheerful man' and 'the thoughtful man.' Milton probably chose the words not so much because they exactly expressed the characteristics of the two men represented as because they were less likely to lead to misconception of his meaning than the words 'Mirth' and 'Melancholy.' Allegro comes from Lat. alacer, from which we have the word 'alacrity,' and there is an air of briskness pervading the whole poem so called; the movement never flags. We have, "Haste thee, nymph," etc., l. 25; "Come, and trip it," l. 33; "In haste her bower she leaves," l. 87; "Out of doors he flings," l. 113; and in many other ways animation and buoyancy are indicated. The whole piece, too, is full of sound, from the morning song of the lark to the whispering winds of evening, and from the merry bells of the upland hamlets to the busy hum of men in towered cities. So far, at any rate, the title L'Allegro is not at variance with the poet's meaning.

Penseroso, from the same root as pensive, avoids the association of ill-humour which belonged to the word 'Melancholy,' though the Italian word pensiero means 'anxious' or 'full of care.' Il Penseroso, however, is not full of care; his mind is tranquil and contemplative, and, like the ancient Greek philosopher, he has learned to be able to endure his own company. Solitude is to him the nurse of Contemplation. There is therefore less rapidity and continuity of movement, and fewer sounds in the Penseroso than in the Allegro: everything in it moves more slowly and quietly.

The two poems are companion pieces, and the student must study them together in order to observe how far the one is the complement, rather than the contrast, of the other. The subjoined analysis may serve to some extent as a guide; it cannot, however, obviate the necessity for careful study of the means by which the poet effects his purpose in each piece. The two pieces may be viewed as pictures of two moods of Milton's own mind—the mind of a young and high-souled student open to all the impressions of nature. They are described by Wordsworth (Preface, 1815) as idylls in which the appearances of external nature are given in conjunction with the character and sentiments of the observer. They are not mere descriptions of any scene or scenes that actually came under Milton's eye, though there is no doubt that the scenery round Horton has left its traces upon the pictures. Each records the events of an ideal day of twenty-four hours—beginning in L'Allegro with the song of the lark and in Il Penseroso with that of the nightingale. It is impossible to say with certainty which was written first; but there can be no hesitation in saying that Il Penseroso is a man much more after Milton's own heart than L'Allegro, i.e. he represents a much more characteristic mood of Milton's mind, and the many ways in which this preference reveals itself should not fail to attract the student's notice.

L'ALLEGRO.

1. Hence: adverbs, when thus used to convey a command, have the meaning of a whole sentence, e.g. hence = go hence; compare the imperative use of away! up! down! etc. 'Hence' represents an A.S. word heon-an, where the suffix denotes 'from'; see note on Arcades, 3.

loathéd = loathsome, hateful; the adjectival use of the past participle is frequent in Milton, and in Elizabethan English it conveyed meanings now generally expressed by adjectives with such terminations as -able, -some, -ful, etc.; see note on l. 40. Contrast the epithet here applied to Melancholy with that used in Il Penseroso, 12.

2. Having personified Melancholy, Milton turns to ancient mythology to find a parentage for her. He makes her the daughter of Night, for 'melancholy' means literally 'black bile,' that humour of the body which was formerly supposed to be the cause of low spirits; in Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy we read: "The night and darkness makes men sad, the like do all subterranean vaults, dark houses in caves and rocks, desert places cause melancholy in an instant." Melancholy being thus associated with darkness, it was natural that Milton should make her the offspring of 'blackest Midnight.' But in classical mythology (Nyx) Night is the wife of Erebus or Darkness, and their children are Æther (Sky) and Hemera (Day). Milton disregards this relationship, and rightly feels that he may alter the ancient tales to suit his own purpose; what can be more natural, therefore, than to justify the epithet 'loathéd' by making Melancholy the offspring of the loathsome monster Cerberus? To have derived her from Night and Darkness would merely have intensified the notion of blackness, and would not have implied anything necessarily abhorrent.

Cerberus was the dog that guarded the gates of Hell, usually described as a monster with three heads, with the tail of a serpent, and with serpents round his neck.

3. Stygian cave: the den of Cerberus was on the further bank of the river Styx, at the spot where the spirits of the dead were landed by Charon. Virgil in Aen. vi. makes Charon say:

"This is the place for the shadows, for Sleep and slumberous Night,
The bodies of the living may not be ferried in my Stygian bark."

The Styx, literally 'the abhorred,' was the chief river of the lower world, around which it flowed seven times. To swear by Styx was regarded as the most solemn of oaths.

forlorn, desolate: now used only as an adjective. This is the past participle of the old verb forleosen, to lose utterly; the prefix for has an intensive force, as in forswear.

4. 'Mongst, common in poetry for 'amongst,' as 'midst' for 'amidst,' 'A' is a prefix = in, and 'amongst' is literally 'in a crowd,' as 'amidst' is 'in the middle.' The adverbs in st, as amongst, amidst, whilst, are derived from obsolete forms in s, as amonges, amiddes, whiles, which again come from the original adverbs among, amid, while.

horrid shapes, etc. Burton, in Anat. of Mel., associates 'terrors and affrights' with melancholy. 'Shape' may be used here in the sense of Lat. umbra, a mere shape or shadow, a departed spirit. Comp. Il Pens. 6. 'Unholy' = impure.

5. some uncouth cell, i.e. some unknown and horrible abode. Radically, 'uncouth' means 'unknown': A.S. un, not; and cuth, the past participle of cunnan, to know. Its secondary meaning is 'ungraceful' or 'ugly,' and in all the cases in which Milton uses this word it seems probable that he has taken advantage both of its primary and its later senses: see Lyc. 186, Par. Lost, ii. 827, v. 98, vi. 362. In early English 'couth' occurs as a present, a past, and a participle, and it still survives in the word 'could' and in the Scotch 'unco' = strange. Similar changes of meaning have occurred to the words 'quaint,' 'barbarous,' 'outlandish,' etc., because that which is unfamiliar is apt to be regarded unfavourably.

The word 'cell' is used in a similar connection in Il Pens. 169.

6. "Where Darkness covers the whole place as with its wings." Darkness is here personified, so that 'his' does not stand for 'its'; on the other hand, if the word 'brooding' is to be taken literally, we should have expected 'her' to be used instead of 'his.' The explanation probably is that Milton makes Darkness of the male sex, like the Lat. Erebus, and that 'brooding' is not used literally, but = covering. In the following passage the word seems to partake of both meanings:—

"On the watery calm
His brooding wings the Spirit of God outspread,
And vital virtue infused."—Par. Lost, vii. 243.

In Tennyson's Two Voices we have "brooding twilight." The primary sense of 'brood' is 'to sit upon in order to breed'; hence a person is said to brood over his injuries when his desire is to obtain vengeance. See also Nat. Ode, l. 192.

jealous wings: 'darkness is very properly associated with jealousy or suspicion,' and there may be also an allusion to the watchful care of the brooding fowl. 'Jealous' and 'zealous' are radically the same.

7. night-raven: in L'Allegro night is associated with the raven, in Il Pens. with the nightingale. The raven was formerly regarded as a bird of evil omen and of prophetic powers: Shelley, in Adonais, speaks of the "obscene raven." In Marlowe's Jewe of Malta we read—

"Like the sad-presaging raven that tolls
The sick man's passport in her hollow beak";

and in Macbeth, i. 4—

"The raven himself is hoarse
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan Under my battlements."

sings, radically = rings or resounds, applied by Milton to the strong notes of the raven, as by Shakespeare to the noise of a tempest: "We hear this fearful tempest sing," Rich. II. II. i. Comp. 'rings,' l. 114.

8. There, i.e. in the "uncouth cell"; an adverb depending on dwell, line 10.

ebon shades, shades as black as ebony, i.e. total darkness. 'Ebon' is the adjectival form, spelt 'heben' in Spenser. Ebony is a kind of wood so called on account of its hardness (Heb. eben, a stone), and as it is usually black, the name has come to be used as a synonym both for hardness and blackness.

low-browed, overhanging or threatening: comp. Il Pens. 58. A person with prominent brow is called 'beetle-browed,' i.e. 'with biting brows,' brows which project like an upper jaw.

9. ragged: Milton represents Melancholy with her hair dishevelled, and her fit abode amongst rugged and disordered rocks. In the English Bible 'ragged' occurs in the sense of 'rugged': Isaiah, ii. 21.

10. In dark Cimmerian desert, i.e. in some desert shrouded in Cimmerian darkness. "In the Odyssey the Cimmerians are a people dwelling beyond the ocean-stream in a land of perpetual darkness; afterwards the name was given to a people in the region of the Black Sea (whence Crimea)." (Masson.) The phrase "Cimmerian darkness" is common in English poetry, and Milton can hardly be accused of tautology in speaking of a "dark Cimmerian desert"; he intensifies the notion of darkness.

The student should note by what means, in the first ten lines of the poem, Milton creates so repugnant a picture of Melancholy that the reader turns with relief and delight to the representation of Mirth which follows: these means are:—

1. Accumulation of words conveying associations of horror, e.g. blackest Midnight, cave forlorn, shrieks, etc.
2. Imagery that intensifies the horror of the picture, e.g. Stygian cave, brooding Darkness, etc.
3. Irregular metre, the rest of the poem being in octosyllabic couplets whose tripping sweetness pleases the ear after the rougher cadence of lines 1-10. The separateness of these lines is further marked (both in L'Allegro and Il Penseroso) by the peculiar arrangement of the rhymes : the formula is abba cdd eec.

11. fair and free : both adjectives are frequently found together in English poetry to denote beauty and gracefulness in woman. We find in Chaucer's Knights Tale : "Of fayre young Venus, fresh and free"; and the words occur in the same sense even before Chaucer's time. Tennyson applies them to a man : comp. "Lord of Burleigh, fair and free."

12. yclept, named : past participle of the verb 'to clepe,' from A.S. clipian, to call. In English the past participle of all verbs of the strong conjugation was originally formed by the suffix en and the prefix ge. The suffix en has now disappeared in many cases and the prefix ge in all. The y in 'yclept' is a corruption of ge, as in yfallen, yfounded, ygo, ywent, yshape, ywritten, all of which are found in Chaucer. The y also took the form i in Early English, as imaked, ispoken, iknownen, etc. Shakespeare has yclept, yclad, etc. Milton in one case prefixes y to a present participle. See note on On Shakespeare, 4.

Euphrosyne (the light-hearted one), one of the three Graces of classical mythology, the others being Aglaia (the bright one) and Thalia (the blooming one). They were represented as daughters of Zeus, and as the goddesses who purified and enhanced all the innocent pleasures of life. Milton desires to signify their service to man more clearly by giving them another genealogy ; he suggests two alternatives, and himself prefers the latter :—(1) That they are the offspring of Venus (love) and Bacchus (good cheer), or (2) of Zephyr (the 'frolic wind') and Aurora (the goddess of the morning). From these parents Euphrosyne is begotten in the month of May, i.e. "it is the early freshness of the summer morning that best produces Cheerfulness" (Masson).

13. heart-easing Mirth : Burton, in Anat. of Mel., prescribes "Mirth and merry company" to ease the heart of the melancholy. With 'heart-easing' (compounded of a participle preceded by its object) compare such adjectives as heart-rending, tale-bearing, soul-stirring, etc.

14. at a birth, at one birth : the words 'a,' 'an,' and 'one' are all derived from the same Anglo-Saxon word : comp. the phrase 'one at a time.'

16. ivy-crowned : the ivy was sacred to Bacchus, the god of wine.

17. There is a change in the construction here, there being no preceding 'whether' answering to 'whether' in this line : the meaning is, 'Whether lovely Venus bore thee, or whether the frolic wind,' etc.

some sager sing, i.e. some poets have more wisely written. Poets are often called 'singers,' but it is not known to what poets Milton can be referring: probably he merely chose this way of modestly recommending his own view.

18. frolic wind, i.e. frolicsome wind. The word 'frolic' is now used only as a noun and a verb, never as an adjective. Yet its original use in English is adjectival, and its form is that of an adjective: it is radically the same as the German fröhlich, so that lic in frolic corresponds exactly to the suffix ly in cleanly, ghastly, etc. By the end of the seventeenth century it came to be used as a noun, and its attributive sense being forgotten, a new adjective was formed—frolicsome, from which again came a new noun—frolicsomeness. In Comus 59 it is used as an adjective: "ripe and frolic."

breathes the spring: this transitive use of the verb is frequent in Milton, with such objects as 'odours,' 'flowers,' 'smell,' etc.

19. Zephyr, the personification of the pleasant West wind: in Par. Lost, v. 16, he is represented as wooing Flora—

"With voice

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes."

20. 'As' here introduces a clause of time. 'Once' does not here denote 'on a single occasion' as opposed to the adverb 'often,' but 'at a former time,' as in the phrase 'once upon a time' (Lat. olim).

a-Maying, enjoying the sports suitable to May. Comp. the song of Aurora, Zephyr and Flora in The Penates of Jonson—

"See, see, O see who here is come a-maying!" etc.

To which May answers:

"All this and more than I have gift of saying

May vows, so you will oft come here a-maying."

Also see Song on May Morning, 5.

Even in ancient times there were May sports, when the Roman youth engaged in dancing and singing in honour of Flora, the goddess of fruits and flowers. Formerly throughout England the sports and customs connected with May-day were observed with the greatest zest.

'A-Maying' = on Maying: in O.E. writers after the Norman Conquest the verbal noun with the preposition 'on' was used after verbs of motion, e.g. 'he wente on hunting'; afterwards on was corrupted into a. 'Maying' is, therefore, not a participle used as a noun, but the verbal noun or gerund. The participle originally ended in ende or inde and the noun in ung; but both now end in ing, and hence they are often confused.

21. There, i.e. where Zephyr met Aurora: an adverb modifying 'filled.' The nom. to 'filled' is 'wind,' line 18.

22. fresh-blown is compounded of a participle and a simple adverb, 'fresh' being equal to 'freshly': the common adverbial suffix in Anglo-Saxon was e, the omission of which has reduced many adverbs to the same form as the adjectives from which they were derived. See note, Il Pens. 66.

roses washed in dew: a similar phrase occurs in Shakespeare—

"I'll say she looks as clear
As morning roses newly washed in dew."

Taming of the Shrew, ii. 1. 173.

Comp. also—

"Her lips like roses overwasht with dew."—Greene, Arcadia.

24. buxom, lively. The spelling of this word disguises its origin; it is buck-some, which arose out of the A.S. bocsum or buhsum = 'easily bowed,' 'flexible' (A.S. bugan, to bow, and the suffix sum, 'like,' as in 'darksome,' etc.). So that the word first meant 'pliable,' then 'obedient,' then 'good-humoured' or 'lively,' and finally 'handsome.' It is now used ordinarily of the handsomeness of stout persons. In its primary sense it was applied to unresisting substances, e.g. "the buxom air" (Par. Lost, II. 842), and the transition to the sense of 'obedient' is a natural one: comp. Spenser's F. Q. iii. 4—

"For great compassion of their sorrow, bid
His mighty waters to them buxome be."

In Shakespeare's Per. i. 1 we find—

"A female heir
So buxom, blithe, and full of face";

and Milton seems to have recollected this passage.

debonair, elegant, courteous: this word, when broken up, is seen to be an Old Fr. phrase—de bon aire, literally 'of a good mien or manner': de = of, bon is from Lat. bonus, good, and aire = manner. Comp. the use of 'air' in the phrase 'to give one's self airs,' i.e. to be vain. 'Debonair' has thus been formed out of three words by mere juxtaposition. See note, Il Pens. 32.

25. Haste thee. In such phrases the pronoun may be said to be used reflectively: comp. 'sit thee down,' 'fare thee well.' In Early English, however, the pronoun was in the dative, marking that the agent was affected by the action, but not that he was the direct object of it: such a dative is called the ethic dative. In Elizabethan writers the use of thee after verbs in the imperative is so common that in many cases its original sense seems to have been lost sight of, and the pronoun consequently seems to be a mere corruption of the nominative thou.

25. Nymph, maiden : the word denotes literally 'a bride.' In Greek mythology the goddesses haunting mountains, woods, and streams were called nymphs ; see line 36.

bring here governs the following words :—Jest, Jollity, quips, cranks, wiles, nods, becks, smiles, Sport, and Laughter, all of which are the names of Mirth's companions. They are personifications of the attributes of happy youth.

26. Jollity, from the adjective 'jolly,' light-hearted : its original sense is 'festivity.' It is not etymologically connected with 'joviality' (from Jove, the joyful planet), though its meaning is similar. See note, Son. i. 3.

27. Quips, sharp sayings, witty jests. Compare "This was a good quip that he gave unto the Jewes" (Latimer). The word is common from 1530 to 1650, and reappears in the nineteenth century.

cranks, i.e. turns of wit. 'Crank' is literally a crook or bend ; hence the word is applied to an iron rod bent into a right angle as in machinery, and to a form of speech in which words are twisted away from their ordinary meaning. Shakespeare uses 'crank' in the sense of a winding passage, Cor. i. 1. 141, and (as a verb) = to wind about, i. Hen. IV. i. 98 ; and Milton has, "To show us the ways of the Lord, straight and faithful as they are, not full of cranks and contradictions." Whenever language is distorted or used equivocally we have a crank in the sense of the above passage.

wanton wiles, playful tricks. 'Wile' is really the same word as 'guile,' which in Earlier English was written 'gile.' Compare ward and guard, wise and guise, warden and guardian ; the forms in 'gu' were introduced into English by the Normans.

28. Nods and becks, signs made with the head and the finger. The word 'beck' is generally applied to signs made in either of these ways, though Milton here distinguishes them ; it is a mere contraction of 'beckon,' to make a sign to, cognate with 'beacon.'

wreathèd smiles, so called because, in the act of smiling or laughing, the features are wreathed or puckered. A wreath is literally that which is 'writhed' or twisted. Compare 'wrinkled care,' l. 31.

29. This line and the next are attributive to 'smiles.' 'Such' qualifies 'smiles,' and the clause introduced by 'as' is relative. As after such is generally regarded as a relative pronoun. Milton is fond of this construction ; see lines 129, 138, 148.

Hebe's cheek : Hebé, in classical mythology, was the goddess of youth, who waited upon the gods and filled their cups with nectar. Later traditions represent her as a divinity who had power to restore youth to the aged. Compare Comus 290 : "As smooth as Hebe's their unrazored lips."

30. 'And are wont to be found in sleek dimples.' 'Dimple' is literally a little 'dip' or depression: compare dingle, dapple, etc. For 'sleek' = soft or smooth, see Lyc. 99.

31. We speak of Sport deriding or laughing away dull care: compare Proverbs, xvii. 22, "A merry heart is a good medicine, but a broken spirit drieth up the bones." See Burton's Anat. of Mel., where Care is said to be 'lean, withered, hollow-eyed, wrinkled,' etc.

32. Laughter, here said to be holding his sides, just as, in popular language, excessive laughter is said to be 'side-splitting.' 'Sport' and 'Laughter' are objects of the verb 'bring,' l. 25.

33. trip it: 'to trip' is to move with short, light steps as in dancing; 'it' is a cognate accusative, as if we said 'to trip a tripping,' and adds nothing to the meaning of the verb. This use of 'it' is extremely common in Elizabethan writers; Shakespeare has to fight it, speak it, revel it, dance it, etc., where (as Abbott suggests) the pronoun seems to indicate some pre-existing object in the mind of the person spoken of. In other cases, such as queen it, foot it, saint it, sinner it, etc., the pronoun seems to be added to show that the words have the force of verbs.

34. light fantastic toe: the toe (or foot) is called 'fantastic' because in dancing its movements are unrestrained or 'full of fancy.' 'Fantastic' is now used only in the sense of 'grotesque' or 'capricious,' but in the time of Shakespeare and Milton fancy and fantasy (which are radically the same word) had not been desynonymised: this explains why an event that had merely been imagined or 'fancied' is described by Shakespeare as 'fantastic.' 'To trip the light fantastic toe' is a phrase now ordinarily used as = 'to dance.' Compare Comus, 144, 962: "light fantastic round."

36. Liberty is here naturally associated with Mirth: in Burton's Anat. of Mel. there is a chapter on "Loss of liberty as a cause of Melancholy." She is here called a mountain-nymph, because mountain fastnesses have always given to their possessors a certain amount of security against invasion and oppression, and because nowhere is the love of liberty more keen. Comp. Cowper's lines—

"'Tis liberty alone that gives the flower
Of fleeting life its lustre and perfume;"

And Wordsworth—

"Two voices are there—one is of the sea,
One of the mountains—each a mighty voice;
In both from age to age thou didst rejoice,
They were thy chosen music, Liberty," etc.

37. due: see note on Il Pens. 155.

38. crew, formerly spelt crue, is common as a sea-term (being applied to the company of sailors on a ship); and, like many other sea-terms in English, is of Scandinavian origin. Its original sense is 'a company' and it is used here by Milton in this unrestricted sense. The word is common in his poems, but in every other case he uses it in a bad sense, applying it to evil spirits or hateful things. 'To admit of' is 'to make a member of.'

39. her, i.e. Liberty.

40. unreproved pleasures free, free and innocent pleasures. This is a favourite arrangement of words in Milton—a noun between two adjectives: it generally implies that the final adjective qualifies the idea conveyed by the first adjective and noun together; comp. "hazel copses green," Lyc. 42; also "native wood-notes wild," l. 134. Unreproved = unreprouvable; comp. 'unvalued' for 'invaluable' in Milton's Lines On Shakespeare, ll. In Shakespeare we find 'unavoided' for 'unavoidable,' 'imagined' for 'imaginable,' 'unnumbered' for 'innumerable,' etc. (see Abbott's Shak. Grammar, § 375). The passive participle is often used to signify, not that which was and is, but that which was and therefore can be hereafter.) In much the same way we still speak of 'an untamed steed,' 'an unconquered army,' 'a dreaded sound.' See also note, Lyc. 176.

41. To hear, like 'to live' in l. 38, is an infinitive of purpose dependent upon the verb 'admit.'

42. startle is an infin. dependent, along with 'begin,' upon 'to hear.' Warton notes that there is a peculiar propriety in 'startle;' the lark's is a sudden shrill burst of song, which is often heard just before sunrise and may therefore be said to scare away the darkness. Comp. Par. Reg. ii. 279.

43. watch-tower: the lark sings high up in the air, so high that, though it may be filling one's ears with its melody, it is often impossible to see the songster. Hence Shakespeare speaks of it as singing "at heaven's gate," and Shelley likens it to a "high-born maiden in a palace tower."

44. dappled, i.e. having the sky covered with small grey clouds: literally, it means 'marked with small dips' or hollows; it has no connection with dab. See note on l. 30. 'Till' here introduces a clause in the indicative; in line 99 the verb is is in the subjunctive mood: see note on Il Pens. 44.

45. Then to come, etc.: dependent, like 'startle,' upon the verb 'to hear' in l. 41. It refers to the lark which is, at day-break, to appear at L'Allegro's window to bid him good morning. This is a fancy frequent in poetry—that the morning song of birds is a friendly greeting to those who hear them. The only difficulties connected with this interpretation are (1) that in making the lark alight at the window of a human dwelling Milton seems to be forgetful of a lark's habits; the ordinary poetical conceit does not apply to this bird, which does not seek man's company, and is a "bird of the wilderness": (2) that the verb 'hear' is usually followed by an infinitive without 'to,' whereas in this case 'to come' is used. These difficulties disappear if we remember that Milton's references to nature are not always strictly accurate (see notes passim); and that 'to come' follows at some distance from 'hear,' thus rendering the introduction of 'to' necessary as a sign of the infinitive.

Prof. Masson, however, rejects this view as nonsense: he says: "The words 'Then to come' in line 45 refer back to, and depend upon, the previous words 'Mirth, admit me' of line 38." On this view, it is not the lark, but L'Allegro himself, that comes to his own window and bids his friends good morning. Other suggestions are that the dawn comes to the window; also that 'to come' is not syntactically dependent on 'admit,' but introduces the new idea of the dawn rising in order to come and wake L'Allegro.

45. in spite of sorrow, i.e. in order to spite or defy sorrow. 'Spite' is a contracted form of 'despite,' and is cognate with 'despise.' This is a peculiar use of the phrase 'in spite of'; ordinarily, when a person is said to do something in spite of sorrow, it is implied that he did it although he was sorrowful. This is obviously not the meaning in this passage, for there is no sorrow in the heart of the lark (or of L'Allegro himself).

46. bid: see note on Lyc. 22.

47. sweet-briar (also spelt brier), a prickly and fragrant shrub, the wild-rose or eglantine.

48. twisted eglantine. Etymologically 'eglantine' denotes something prickly (Fr. aiguille, a needle), but since Milton has just named the sweet-briar, which is commonly identified with the eglantine, and calls the eglantine 'twisted' (which it is not), it is probable that he meant the honeysuckle. 'Twisted' may properly be applied to creeping or climbing plants.

49. cock. The crowing of the cock is universally associated with the dawn; hence Milton speaks of this bird as scattering the last remnants of darkness by his crowing. So in Shakespeare we have a reference to the superstition that spirits vanished at cock-crow. In classical times the cock was sacred to Apollo, the god of the sun, because it announced sunrise. Comp. the Eastern proverb, used to a person to intimate that the speaker can dispense with his services—"Do you think there will be no dawn if there is no cock?"

The adjective 'thin' may be taken as qualifying 'rear': so we speak of the thin or straggling rear of an army as distinct from its close and serried van.

52. Stoutly struts his dames before, walks with conscious pride in front of the hens. In Latin we find the cock described as the gallus rixosus, pugnacious fowl. Cowper speaks of the 'wonted strut' of the cock. 'Before,' in this line, is a preposition governing 'dames': 'dame' is from Lat. domina, a lady.

The bold step of the cock is well expressed by the rhythm of this line in contrast with that of the preceding one.

53. listening: this word refers to L'Allegro himself: it introduces another of his 'unreproved pleasures' of the morning. The word 'oft' shows that the poet is not recounting the pleasures of one particular morning, but morning pleasures in general.

54. 'The sounds made by the barking hounds and the huntsman's horn joyfully awaken the morning.' Similarly in Gray's Elegy the cock-crow and the "echoing horn" are both referred to as morning sounds. Gray was (as Lowell notes) greatly influenced by a study of Milton's poetry.

cheerly, cheerily or cheerfully: in the phrase 'be of good cheer,' we see the primary sense of the word 'cheer,' which is from a French word meaning 'the face.' A bright face is the index of a cheerful spirit.

55. hoar. This may imply that the hill appears gray through the haze of distance, or, more literally, that it is white with frost or rime, the hunters being astir before the rising sun has melted the frozen dew (hoar-frost). In Arc. 98 Milton applies 'hoar' to a mountain in the more usual sense of 'old': comp. 'hoary-headed.'

56. high wood, because on the side of a hill. 'Echoing' here qualifies 'hounds and horn.'

shrill. In modern English the use of adjectival forms as adverbs is common; in many cases they represent the old adverb ending in -e (see note on l. 22). It must not be supposed, however, that wherever an adjective is used with a verb its force is that of an adverb: e.g. "through the high wood echoing shrill," or "Hope springs eternal in the human breast." Here it is not correct to say that 'shrill' merely means 'shrilly,' and 'eternal' means 'eternally'; the adjectives have a distinct use in pointing to a quality of the agent rather than of the act.

57. Sometime, i.e. 'for some time,' or 'at one time or other.' The genitive form 'sometimes' has a different meaning = occasionally.

not unseen: see Analysis and note Il Pens. 65; "Happy men love witnesses of their joy; the splenetic love solitude." Burton, in Anat. of Mel., says of the melancholy: "They delight in floods and waters, desert places, to walk alone in orchards, gardens, private walks," etc.

58. elms. Warton notes that the elm seems to have been Milton's favourite tree, judging from its frequent mention both in his Latin and English poems. The scenery in the neighbourhood of Horton may account for this, though it must not be supposed that Milton is in this poem describing any actual scene. Masson says: "A visit to Horton any summer's day ... to stroll among the meadows and pollards by the banks of the sluggish Colne, where Milton must have so often walked and mused, may be recommended to lovers of Literature and of English History."

59. This line is dependent on 'walking': 'right' is an adverb modifying the preposition 'against.' Comp. 'He cut right through the enemy,' 'I have got half through my work,' etc. 'Against' implies that L'Allegro is walking with his face turned directly to the rising sun.

the eastern gate, a favourite image in poetry for that part of the sky from which the sun seems to issue. In classical mythology the god of the sun was represented as riding in a chariot through the heavens from East to West, and in one of his Latin poems (Eleg. iii.) Milton represents the sun as the 'light-bringing' king, whose home is on the shores of the Ganges (i.e. in the far East). Comp. "Hark, hark! the lark at Heaven's gate sings," Cymbeline II. iii.

60. begins his state, begins his stately march towards his other goal' in the west. Comp. Arc. 81, note.

61. amber light, amber-coloured light: noun used as adjective.

62. 'The clouds (being) arrayed in numerous colours.' Grammatically, 'clouds' is here used absolutely. In Latin a noun or pronoun in the ablative along with a participle was often used as a substitute for a subordinate clause, and Milton is fond of this construction. Here, line 62 is an adverbial clause modifying 'begins.' In English, the noun is generally said to be the nominative absolute, but in the case of pronouns, the form shows whether the nom. or obj. is used. Milton uses both; comp. "Him destroyed, for whom all this was made," and "Adam shall live with her, I extinct." Modern writers prefer the nom. case both for nouns and pronouns. In Anglo-Saxon the dative was used.

liveries here refers to dress, as when we speak of a servant's livery. Its primary sense was more general—anything delivered or served out, whether clothes, food, or money: a peer was even said to have livery of his feudal holdings from the king. As the livery of a servant is generally of some distinctive colour, Milton applies the word to the many-hued clouds. It may also imply that the clouds, as servants, attend their master, the Sun, in his stately march.

62. dight, a nearly obsolete word = arrayed: comp. Il Pens. 159. It is a short form of dighted, from the verb 'to dight' (A.S. dihtan, to set in order), which, as Masson remarks, still survives in the Scottish word dicht, to wipe or clean.

65. blithe: see note on l. 56.

67. tells his tale = counts his sheep, in order to find if any have gone amissing during the night. 'Tale' is thus used in the sense of 'that which is told or counted,' which was one of its meanings in Early Eng.: A.S. talū, a number. In the Bible 'tell' and 'tale' are frequently used in this sense, Gen. xv. 5, Psalms xxii. 17, Exod. v. 18; and in the works of writers nearly contemporary with Milton the words are used of the counting of sheep.

'To tell a tale' may also mean 'to relate a story,' and the shepherds may be supposed to sit and amuse themselves with simple narratives. But, as Milton in the previous lines refers to such rural occupations as are suited to the early morning, and represents each person as engaged in some ordinary duty, it seems likely that in this line also some piece of business is meant, and not a pastime. The morning hours are not usually those devoted to story-telling.

69. Straight, straightway, immediately. "There is, in my opinion, great beauty in this abrupt and rapturous start of the poet's imagination, as it is extremely well adapted to the subject, and carries a very pretty allusion to those sudden gleams of vernal delight which break in upon the mind at the sight of a fine prospect" (Thyer). See note, Univ. Carrier, ii. 10.

70. Whilst it (i.e. the eye) measures the landscape round; sweeps over the surrounding scene. Landscape, spelt by Milton landskip, which resembles the A.S. form, landscipe = 'land-shape,' the aspect or general appearance of the country. The word is borrowed from the Dutch painters, who applied it to what we now call the background of a picture. 'Scape' is radically the same as the suffix -ship, seen in ladyship, worship, friendship, etc., where it serves to form abstract nouns. 'Round' is an adverb modifying 'measures,' = around.

71. Russet lawns, and fallows grey: 'lawn' is always used by Milton to denote an open stretch of grassy ground, whereas in modern usage it is applied to a smooth piece of grass-grown land in front of a house. The origin of the word is disputed, but it seems radically to denote 'a clear space'; it is said to be cognate with llan used as a prefix in the names of certain Welsh towns, e.g. Llandaff, Llangollen. Comp. Lyc. 25. 'Fallow' literally denotes 'pale-coloured,' e.g. tawny or yellow: hence applied to land ploughed but not bearing a crop, as it is generally of a tawny colour; and finally to all land that has been long left unsown and is therefore grass-grown. It is in this last sense that Milton uses it, and as the word has lost all significance of colour (when applied to land) he adds the adjective 'grey' to distinguish it from those fields that are 'russet' or reddish-brown: the former are more distant, the latter nearer at hand. See note l. 55.

72. stray: comp. Lat. errare, to wander.

73. Mountains, along with 'lawns,' 'fallows,' 'meadows,' 'brooks,' and 'rivers,' is in apposition to 'new pleasures,' l. 69.

74. labouring clouds, so called because they bring forth rain and storms. The image of clouds resting on the mountain-top is well expressed by Shelley:—

"I sift the snow on the mountains below,
And their great pines groan aghast;
And all the night 'tis my pillow white,
While I sleep in the arms of the blast."

The Cloud.

75. trim: comp. 'trim gardens,' Il Pens. 50, 'daisies trim,' Com. 120. The student should note the prevailing position of the adjectives in lines 71, 75, 76, 126, etc. Where contrast is intended, as in line 76, the two nouns are placed together and the adjectives apart; so in Latin frequently.

pled, variegated. The word literally means 'variegated like a magpie'; it is a common epithet in poetry and is applied by Shakespeare to daisies (L. L. L. v. ii.). It is therefore probable that in this passage also 'pled' qualifies 'daisies'; otherwise it might be taken as an attribute of 'meadows.' Comp. piebald, applied to animals.

77. Towers and battlements it (i.e. the eye) sees. This thought may have been suggested to Milton by the fact that his eye, in taking in the landscape around Horton, would often light on the towers of Windsor Castle in the distance: comp. Com. 935.

78. Bosomed, embosomed.

79. Where perhaps some beautiful lady dwells, a centre of attraction. Lines 79 and 80 form an attributive adjunct to 'towers and battlements.'

beauty: see note on Lyc. 166.

lies=dwells; comp. Lyc. 53, and Shakespeare, 'When the court lay at Windsor' (M. W. of W. ii. 2).

80. cynosure, now applied generally to an object of great interest: so called because the Cynosura, the stars composing the tail of the constellation of the Lesser Bear, was the mark by which the Phœnician sailors steered their course at sea. 'Cynosure' is from the Greek kynos oura, a dog's tail: comp. Com. 342: "Tyrian Cynosure." A star by which sailors steer is also called a 'lode-star,' a word which is used metaphorically in the same way as 'cynosure'; comp. "Your eyes are lode-stars," M. N. D. i. 1.

neighbouring: 'neighbour' is radically 'near-dweller' (A.S. neah-búr).

81. Hard by, near at hand: 'by' = alongside, an adverb modifying 'smokes'; 'hard' is an adverb of degree modifying 'by.' Comp. the sense of 'by' in the phrases close by, fast by, to put a thing by (i.e. aside).

82. From: a preposition may, as here, govern an adverbial phrase.

83. Where, in which cottage. Corydon, Thyrsis, Thestylis occur frequently in pastoral poetry as the names of shepherds, and Phyllis as the name of a female. See Virgil's Bucolics, Theocritus, Spenser, etc.

met: 'having met together, they are seated at their savoury dinner of herbs and other country dishes.'

85. messes, dishes of food. 'Mess' originally meant something placed on a table (Lat. missum): the word here has no connection with 'mess,' a disordered mixture, a usage not found in Elizabethan writers.

86. neat-handed: 'neat' is a kind of transferred epithet, referring not to the woman's hands but to the appearance of the food prepared by her. So a skilful carpenter may be called 'neat-handed,' a good needlewoman 'neat-fingered,' etc.

87. bower, here refers to the cottage. A 'bower' is strictly something built, a dwelling-place: it came to be applied to the inner chamber occupied by a lady.

With Thestylis: 'with' here means 'in company with,' a woman being generally employed at harvest-time to assist in binding the corn into sheaves.

89. Or. The construction is: 'Either she leaves her bower to bind the sheaves, or (she goes) to the tanned haycock.' This is evidently the meaning; 'she goes' being implied in the previous verb 'leaves.' This construction, by which two nouns or phrases are connected with one verb which really suits only one of them, is common in Milton, and is called zeugma.

earlier season, because the hay-harvest is earlier than the grain-harvest.

90. tanned haycock, a pile of dried hay. The word 'cock' (by itself) means a 'small pile of hay': it is radically distinct from the word 'cock' in any other sense.

mead, meadow. The form in -ow (comp. arrow, sparrow, marrow, sorrow) is due to an A.S. suffix -we.

91. secure, free from care, not fearing harm. This is the primary sense of the word [Lat. se (for sine) = free from, cura = care]: it therefore corresponds exactly to the English word 'care-less.' It is used in this sense in the Bible and in such passages as—

“Man may securely sin, but safely never.”

In Latin securus is sometimes applied to that which frees from care. In modern English 'secure' means 'safe,' actually free from danger.

92. “Milton again notes a paragraph in the poem, changing the scene. It is now past mid-day and into the afternoon; and we are invited to a rustic holiday among the ‘upland hamlets’ or little villages among the slopes” (Masson).

upland hamlets: as the poet here introduces us to the primitive amusements and superstitions of village life we may take ‘upland’ to mean ‘far removed from large cities.’ The word ‘uplandish’ was formerly used in the sense of ‘rude’ or ‘unrefined,’ because, in the uplands, the refinements of town-life were unknown. Comp. note on l. 5. ‘Hamlet’ = ham-let, a little home (A.S. ham): comp. the affix in the names of certain towns—Nottingham, Birmingham, etc.

invite: the object of this verb is not expressed.

94. jocund, merry: from the Lat. jucundus, pleasant. (It has no radical connection with the words joke, jocular, as is sometimes stated.)

rebecks. The rebeck was a three-stringed fiddle, played with a bow. The name is the same as the Persian rabāb, applied to a two-stringed instrument said to have been introduced into Europe by the Moors. The modern violin has four strings.

95. many a youth. ‘Youth’ = young-th, the state of being young; it is now used both in its abstract and concrete senses: in the latter it applies properly, as here, to a young man.

‘Many a’ is a peculiar idiom, which has been explained variously. One theory is that ‘many’ is a corruption of the French mesnie, a train or company, and ‘a’ a corruption of the preposition ‘of,’ the singular noun being then substituted for the plural through confusion of the preposition with the article. A more correct view seems to be that ‘many’ is the A.S. manig, which was in old English used with a singular noun and without the article, e.g. manig mann = many men. In the thirteenth century the indefinite article began to be inserted, thus mony enne thing = ‘many a thing,’ just as we say ‘what a thing,’ ‘such a thing.’ This would imply that ‘a’ is not a corruption of ‘of,’ and that there is no connection with the French word mesnie.

96. chequered shade. The meaning may be illustrated by a passage from Shakespeare—

“The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,
And make a chequered shadow on the ground.”

Titus Andron. ii. 4.

Comp. “a shadow-chequer’d lawn,” Tennyson’s Recoll. of Arabian Nights.

The radical meaning of ‘chequered’ or ‘checkered’ is ‘marked with squares’ (like a chess-board); hence it is here applied to the ground marked in dark and light. The game of draughts which is played on a chess-board is sometimes called ‘checkers.’ The word ‘check’ is derived, through the French, from the Persian sháh, a king, the name given to the principal piece on the chess-board: ‘chess’ is merely a corruption of the plural ‘checks.’

97. ‘And (to) young and old (who have) come forth to play.’ ‘Come’ is the past participle agreeing with ‘young and old.’

to play: infinitive of purpose after a verb of motion; in early English the gerund was used, preceded by the preposition to.

98. sunshine holiday: comp. Com. 959. ‘Sunshine’ is a noun used as an adjective. Milton wrote ‘holyday,’ which shows the origin of the word. The accent in such compounds (comp. blue-bell, blackbird, etc.) falls on the adjective; it is only in this way that the ear can tell whether the compounds (e.g. holiday) or the separate words (e.g. hóly dáy) are being used.

99. livelong, longlasting: see On Shakespeare, 8, note. For ‘fail,’ the subjunctive after ‘till,’ compare l. 44.

100. We have here to supply a verb of motion before ‘to,’ e.g. ‘they proceed’: comp. lines 90 and 131.

spicy nut-brown ale, a drink composed of hot ale, nutmeg, sugar, toast, and roasted crabs or apples. It was called Lamb’s wool from its frothy appearance, and Shakespeare refers to it as “gossip’s bowl,” while another Elizabethan writer calls it “the spiced wassel bowl.”

101. feat, exploit, wonderful deed. ‘Feat,’ like ‘fact,’ is radically ‘something done’ (Lat. factum). For ‘many a,’ see l. 95.

102. Faery Mab. Mab was the fairy who sent dreams, and hence a person subject to dreams is said to be ‘favoured with the visits of queen Mab.’ See an account of her powers in this respect in Romeo and Juliet, l. iv. Ben Jonson alludes to the liking of the fairies for cream:—

“ When about the cream-houls sweet
 You and all your elves do meet.
 This is Mab, the mistress-fairy,
 That doth nightly rob the dairy.
 She that pinches country wenches,
 If they scrub not clean their benches.’

Milton’s spelling ‘faery’ comes nearer to the early English word ‘faerie,’ which meant ‘enchantment.’

junkets, also spelt juncates. The original sense is ‘a kind of cream-cheese served up on rushes’ (Ital. giunco, a rush): it was then applied to various kinds of delicacies made of cream, then to any delicacy, and finally to a ‘merrymaking.’ Hence the verb ‘to junket,’ i.e. to revel. Milton here means ‘dainties.’

eat: here past tense = ate.

103. She ... he, etc. One of the girls tells how she was pinched in her sleep by the fairies (the popular superstition being that only lazy servants were treated in this way), and then a young man tells his experience: at one time he was led astray by the ignis fatuus, and at another time he had suffered from the tricks of Robin Goodfellow.

104. The construction is awkward: we may read either (1) ‘And he (was) led by Friar’s lantern; (he) tells how’ etc., or (2) ‘And he, (having been) led by Friar’s lantern, tells how’ etc. The former reading is preferable as it separates the two stories regarding the ‘Friar’s lantern’ and the ‘drudging goblin,’ but it leaves the verb ‘tells’ without a subject. This, however, occasionally happens in Milton. The other reading is grammatically easy, but confuses the two stories. A third suggestion is to read Tales for Tells in line 105, putting a colon at led.

Friar’s lantern. This refers to the flickering light often seen above marshy ground and liable to be mistaken by the belated traveller for the light of a lamp. It is popularly called Jack o’ lantern or Will o’ the Wisp. This explains Milton’s use of the word ‘lantern,’ but it does not explain why he should call it ‘Friar’s’ lantern. He may refer to a spirit popularly called Friar Rush, who, however, neither haunted fields nor carried a lantern, but played pranks in houses during the night; he is therefore distinct from Jack o’ lantern. ‘Friar’ is a member of a religious order (Lat. frater, Fr. frère, a brother).

105. drudging goblin: sometimes called Robin Goodfellow or Hobgoblin (or Puck as in Shakespeare). Comp. Anat of Mel. I. ii.: ‘A bigger kind there is of them (i.e. terrestrial demons) called with us hobgoblins and Robin Goodfellows, that would in those superstitious times grind corn for a mess of milk, cut wood, or do any manner of drudgery work, . . . to draw water, dress meat, or any such thing.' It is to be noted that the individuality of these familiar spirits is often not very clear. Milton confuses Jack o' lantern and Friar Rush, while keeping Robin Goodfellow distinct; Shakespeare does not distinguish Robin Goodfellow, Jack o' lantern, and Puck (see Midsummer Night's Dream, ii. 1); while Burton makes Robin Goodfellow a house spirit and speaks of men being "led round about a heath with a Puck in the night." Scott makes the same mistake as Milton, and Ben Jonson in The Sad Shepherd introduces 'Puck-hairy' or 'Robin Goodfellow,' a hind. See note on Il Pens. 93.

'To drudge' is to perform hard and humble work. 'Goblin,' a supernatural being, generally represented as of small size but great strength; sometimes mischievous, sometimes kindly disposed. In the form hob-goblin 'hob' is a corruption of Robin; hence Robin Goodfellow and Hobgoblin are the same.

105. sweat; here past tense of a strong verb (O.E. swat or swot); it is now treated as a weak verb, and the past tense is sweated. Comp. such weak verbs as creep, leap, quake, swell, wash, weep, of which the old preterites were crop, leep, quoke, swal, wesh, wep.

106. To earn: infin. of purpose.

duly set, i.e. placed as the goblin's due: 'set' qualifies 'cream-bowl.'

107. ere: comp. l. 114 and Lyc. 25. 'Ere' = before, now used only as a conjunction or preposition: in A.S. ær was an adverb as well, and not a comparative but a positive form = soon.

108. shadowy flail; being wielded by a spirit, the flail is here called 'shadowy' = invisible. 'Flail' is from Lat. flagellum, a scourge.

hath: Milton always used this older inflexion, and never the form has.

109. end. The goblin performed in one night a task that ten labourers working a whole day could not have completed; end = complete. Notice that 'end' and 'fiend' (pron. fend) here rhyme together.

110. Then the lubber fiend lies (him) down. Comp. 'haste thee,' l. 25 and note; 'him' is here reflective.

lubber fiend: 'lubber' is generally applied to a big clumsy fellow, whereas Robin Goodfellow was a small and active fairy, who could scarcely be "stretched out all the chimney's length." Milton may have referred to 'Lob-lie-by-the-fire, the giant son of a witch mentioned in Fletcher's Knight of the Burning Pestle. Shakespeare calls Puck a 'lob of spirits.'

111. chimney's length, i.e. the width of the fireplace or hearth. 'Chimney' in the sense of fireplace is obsolete except in compounds, e.g. chimney-piece, chimney-corner. It now means 'flue' or passage for smoke; as such passages did not exist in Roman houses, the Lat. caminus (from which chimney is derived) meant a furnace, brazier, or fireplace.

112. Basks ... strength. 'To bask' is to 'lie exposed to a pleasant warmth.' The word is here used transitively, its object being 'strength,' and its meaning 'to expose to warmth.'

hairy: an epithet transferred from the person to an attendant circumstance; comp. 'dimpled mirth,' 'wrinkled care,' 'pale fear,' 'gaunt hunger.' Ben Jonson speaks of Puck as being hairy, and strength is often associated with abundant growth of hair: see Samson Agonistes, passim.

113. crop-full, with well-filled stomach. The 'crop' is the first stomach of fowls.

flings, i.e. flings himself, darts. This verb is one of a number that may be used reflectively without having the reflexive pronoun expressed: comp. 'he pushed into the room,' 'he has changed very much,' etc.

114. first cock; because one cock sets the others a-crowing.

matin, morning call (Fr. matin, morning); comp. Par. Lost, v. 7, "The shrill matin-song of birds on every bough." In Par. Lost, vi. 526, it occurs as an adjective, and in Hamlet Shakespeare uses it as a noun = morning: "The glow-worm shows the matin to be near." The word matins is now used for morning prayers.

115. Thus done the tales. Absolute construction (as in l. 62) = The tales (being) thus done, they (i.e. the villagers) creep to bed.

116. lulled = being lulled, attributive to 'they.'

117. Towered cities ... then. 'Then' does not here denote 'afterwards' as it does in line 100; it marks a transition from mirth in the country to mirth in the city, and the poet now recounts the entertainments of city life, as L'Allegro might read of them in romances and tales of chivalry. This explains the allusions to 'throngs of knights,' contests of 'wit or arms,' 'antique pageantry,' etc. These are not the events of one day except in the sense that L'Allegro might, on his return from the village rejoicings, retire to his own room to read about them.

'Towered,' having towers (Lat. turrita, an epithet which Milton himself applied to London in one of his Latin Elegies). Comp. Arc. 21. There is no doubt that the poet, during his stay at Horton, paid occasional visits to London, and Warton infers from expressions in the first Elegy that he had in his youth enjoyed the theatre.

118. hum, nominative, along with 'cities,' to 'please.'

119. knights and barons: it is interesting to note the original meaning of these and other words that are now titles of rank. 'Knight'=A.S. cniht, a youth; 'baron' meant at first no more than 'man' or 'husband'; 'duke'=Lat. dux, a 'leader'; 'count' is really Lat. comes, a companion; and 'earl' is Old Saxon erl, a man.

120. weeds, garments. Comp. the use of the word by Shakespeare—

"I have a woman's longing
To see great Hector in his weeds of peace."
Tr. and Cres. iii. 3.

'Weeds of peace' denotes the ordinary dress as opposed to 'weeds of war,' i.e. armour, etc. The use of the word is now generally confined to the phrase 'a widow's weeds,' i.e. a widow's mourning dress. Comp. Comus, 16, 189, 390.

high triumphs, grand public entertainments, such as masques, pageants, processions, tournaments, etc. Comp. Sams. Agon. 1312 and Bacon's Essay Of Masques and Triumphs. Such exhibitions were extremely popular from the time of Henry VIII. to Charles I. See Arcades, introductory note.

121. store of ladies, many ladies. The word 'store' is found in this sense in Sidney, Spenser, and others. It is now applied only to inanimate objects to denote abundance.

122. Rain, pour forth. 'To rain' in the sense of 'to pour forth in abundance' is a common expression: comp. 'to stream,' 'to shower,' 'to overflow.'

influence. This word is now chiefly used in the sense of 'power' or 'authority,' but a trace of its original meaning still remains in such phrases as 'magnetic influence,' 'the influence (i.e. inspiration) of the Spirit.' Its literal meaning is a flowing in (Lat. in, and fluere, to flow), and in this sense it was used in astrology to denote "a flowing in, an influent course of the planets, their virtue being infused into, or their course working on, inferior creatures." This was originally the only meaning of the word, and in this sense Milton and Shakespeare employ it: in this passage it implies that the bright eyes of the ladies were like the stars in 'working on' those upon whom their glances fell.

Burton, in Anat. of Mel., says: 'Primary causes are the heavens, planets, stars, etc., by their influence (as our astrologers hold) producing this and such like effects.' It is well to remember how strong a hold the belief in astrology had (and still has) on the human mind; up to the end of the eighteenth century the almanacs in common use in England were full of astrological rules and theories, and even an astronomer like Kepler was not entirely free from belief in such matters. It is not surprising, therefore, that the science of astrology has left its traces on the language in such words as 'influence,' 'disastrous,' 'ill-starred,' 'ascendency,' etc. Comp. notes on Arc. 52, Il Pens. 24, and Nat. Ode, 71.

judge the prize, adjudge or award the prize. We may take 'eyes' as nominative to both of the verbs 'rain' and 'judge,' the ladies showing by their eyes whom they regard as the victor. But Milton occasionally connects two verbs rather loosely with one noun, just as he, on the other hand, makes one verb refer by zeugma to two nouns in different senses. We may therefore read, 'who judge,' the relative being implied in 'whose,' l. 121. Comp. Il Pens. 155, Lyc. 89.

123. Of wit or arms: comp. 'gowns, not arms,' Son. xvii. The contests of wit in which ladies were the judges may be those 'Courts of Love' which were so popular in France until the end of the fourteenth century and had so great an influence on the poetical literature both of France and England. The contests of arms may refer to those tournaments in which mounted knights fought to show their skill in arms, the victor generally receiving his prize at the hands of some fair lady. Comp. Il Pens. 118.

124. her grace whom, i.e. the grace of her whom. The relative pronoun here relates, not to the noun preceding it, but to the substantive implied in the possessive pronoun. His, her, etc. being genitives = of him, of her, etc., they have here their full force as pronouns, and are not pronominal adjectives (as they are sometimes called). The same idiom is found in Latin, e.g. mea scripta timentis, 'my writings who (I) fear' = the writings of me who am in fear. Comp. Arc. 75, Son. xviii. 6. Grace = favour.

125. Hymen ... in saffron robe. Hymen, being the god of marriage, Milton here refers to elaborate marriage festivities which often included masques and other spectacles: comp. Ben Jonson's Hymenaei, where Hymen enters upon the stage 'in a saffron-coloured robe, his under vestures white, his socks yellow, a yellow veil of silk on his left arm, his head crowned with roses and marjoram, in his right hand a torch of pine-tree.' Comp. Milton's fifth Elegy, 105:

Exulting youths the Hymeneal sing,
With Hymen's name, roofs, rocks, and valleys ring;
He, new attired, and by the season drest
Proceeds, all fragrant, in his saffron vest.
(Cowper's translation).

In works of art, Hymen is represented as a youth bearing a torch. Milton uses 'taper,' now restricted to a small wax-candle ; from this use we get the adjectives 'taper' = taper-like, long and slender, and 'tapering.' The radical sense of 'taper' is 'that which glows or shines.'

125. appear : after the verb let the simple infinitive without to is used : let Hymen (to) appear.'

127. pomp and feast and revelry : these words depend upon the verb 'let.' Milton here used the word 'pomp' in its classical sense (Greek pompé) = an imposing procession. Comp. Sams. Agon. 1312, and note on l. 120.

128. mask : masque, musical drama.

antique pageantry, representations or emblematic spectacles in which mythological characters were largely introduced. 'Pageantry' is an interesting word. The suffix -ry has a collective or comprehensive force (which has gained in some cases an abstract sense) as in cavalry, infantry, poetry, etc. Pageant meant (1) a moveable platform ; then (2) a platform on which plays were exhibited ; hence (3) the play itself ; and (as the plays first exhibited in this way made large use of spectacular effect) (4) a spectacle or show.

'Antique,' belonging to earlier times (Lat. antiquus, also spelt anticus). This word has gone through changes of meaning similar to those of the word 'uncouth' (see l. 5), viz. (1) old, (2) old-fashioned or out of date, and hence (3) fantastic : there is, however, this difference—that while 'uncouth' has had all three senses, 'antique' has had only the two first, the third being taken by the form 'antic.'

129. Such sights, etc. These words stand in apposition to 'pomp,' 'feast,' etc. Some suppose that Milton here refers to the early works of Ben Jonson, who was a prolific writer of masques. But surely they have a deeper significance ; they imply that the imagery of the poem is not that of mere recollection, but the product of a youthful nature, full of joyous emotion, and affected by circumstances of time and place. A youthful poet, a haunted stream, and a summer evening form a combination that does not lead to mere description.

131. Then to the well-trod stage, sc. 'let me go' : this means that L'Allegro turns from the stories of chivalry to the comedies of Shakespeare and Jonson : comp. note l. 117. By calling the stage 'well-trod' Milton may hint at the abundance of dramatic literature.

anon, soon after (A.S. on ðn, in one moment) : an adverb modifying the verb of motion understood.

132. Jonson's learned sock. Ben Jonson (1574-1637) was alive when Milton paid him this compliment. There is no doubt that Milton must have admired Jonson for his classical learning and for his lofty sense of the poet's task. He calls him 'learned' on account of the profuse display of classical knowledge and dramatic art in his comedies and masques. On this point he is often contrasted with Shakespeare. Hazlitt says: "Shakespeare gives fair play to nature and his own genius, while the other trusts almost entirely to imitation and custom. Shakespeare takes his groundwork in individual character and the manners of his age, and raises from them a fantastical and delightful superstructure of his own; the other takes the same groundwork in matter-of-fact, but hardly ever rises above it." Fuller compares Jonson to a Spanish galleon and Shakespeare to an English man-of-war: "Master Jonson, like the former, was built far higher in learning; solid but slow in his performances. Shakespeare, like the latter, lesser in bulk, but lighter in sailing, could turn with all tides, and take advantage of all winds, by the quickness of his wit and invention."

sock: here used as emblematic of comedy in general. as 'buskin' is used of tragedy (comp. Il Pens. 102). The sock (Lat. soccus) was a kind of low slipper worn by actors in the comedies of ancient Rome. 'Sock' here cleverly refers to Jonson's liking for the classical drama: it was, less fittingly, used by Jonson himself of Shakespeare.

133. Or (if) sweetest Shakespeare, Fancy's child, etc. Milton speaks of Shakespeare with reference only to his comedies and to that aspect of them that would appeal most readily to the cheerful man. A comedy like Measure for Measure could hardly be adequately characterised as 'native wood-notes wild,' but such a comedy would no more accord with the mood of L'Allegro than the tragedy of Hamlet. Milton's language here is sufficiently accounted for by the fact that he is contrasting Shakespeare as master of the romantic drama with Jonson as master of the classical drama, that he is paying a tribute to his striking natural genius ('native wood-notes'), and that he regards him as indeed a poet, being 'of imagination all compact' ('Fancy's child'). L'Allegro cannot be expected to use the language of the lines On Shakespeare: he represents a special mood of the human spirit, a mood with which Milton is not so fully in sympathy as that of Il Penseroso. 'Fancy' (Phantasy) is here used in a less restricted sense than now: we would now use 'Imagination.' The student should note the pleasing rhythm and alliteration of lines 133, 134.

135. against eating cares, to ward off gnawing anxiety. It is a common figure to speak of care or sorrow eating into the heart as rust corrodes iron. Comp. Lat. curas edaces, Horace, Odes, ii. 11; mordaces sollicitudines, Odes, i. 18. The preposition 'against, from the notion of counteraction implied in it, has a variety of uses: comp. 'he fought against (in opposition to) the enemy'; 'he toiled against (in provision for) my return.'

136. Milton now refers to the delights of music, and it is well to notice how he 'marries' the sound to the sense by the recurrence of the liquid or smooth-flowing consonants (l, m, n, r) in lines 136-144.

Lap me, let me be wrapped or folded: 'lap' is a mere corruption of 'wrap.' Comp. Comus, 257: "lap it in Elysium."

Lydian airs, soft and sweet music. "Of the three chief musical modes or measures among the ancients, the Dorian, Phrygian, and Lydian, the first was majestic (Par. Lost, i. 550), the second sprightly, the third amorous or tender." Comp. Lyc. 189.

137. Married to, associated with. Comp. Wordsworth—

"Wisdom married to immortal verse."—Excurs. viii.

Shakespeare (Sonnet cxvi.) speaks of 'the marriage of true minds.' By a similar metaphor we say that a person is wedded to a habit or a theory.

"Immortal verse" is poetry which, like that of Milton himself, "the world should not willingly let die"; see Comus, 516.

138. 'Such as may penetrate the soul that meets it or sympathises with it.' Comp. Cowper—

"There is in souls a sympathy with sounds,
And as the mind is pitched, the ear is pleased
With melting airs or martial, brisk or grave."

In this line 'pierce' rhymes with 'verse.'

139. bout, a turn or bend, referring here to the melody. 'Bout' is another form of 'bight,' and is cognate with 'bow.'

140. long drawn out: the scansion of this line will show its appropriateness to the sense. 'Long,' an adverb modifying 'drawn out.'

141. wanton heed and giddy cunning: the music, in order to be expressive, must be free or unrestrained, yet correctly and skilfully rendered. 'Wanton heed' and 'giddy cunning' are examples of oxymoron. 'Cunning' = skill (A.S. cunnan, to know, be able), now used in the restricted sense of 'wiliness.' Comp. the similar degradation of meaning in craft, originally 'strength'; artful; designing; etc.

142. voice, here absolute case along with the participle 'running': comp. l. 62, note. For the sense of 'melting' comp. Il Pens. 165.

mazes, the intricate or difficult parts of the music.

143. Untwisting all, etc.: comp. note on Arc. 72. The harmony that is in the human soul is generally deadened or imprisoned, and it is only by sweet music or some other stimulus that touches a chord within us that the hidden harmony of the soul reveals itself. See Shakespeare, Mer. of Venice, v. i. 61.

145. That, so that: the use of 'that' instead of 'so that' to introduce a clause of consequence, is common in Elizabethan writers and in Milton himself.

Orpheus' self: 'Orpheus himself' we should now say. 'Self' was originally an adjective = 'same,' in which sense it is still used with pronouns of the third person (as himself, herself). Then it came to be regarded as a substantive, and was preceded by the possessive pronouns or by a noun in the possessive case (as myself, ourselves, Orpheus' self). In the latter sense it is not used with pronouns of the third person: we cannot say his-self, but him-self.

Orpheus, "in the Greek mythology, was the unparalleled singer and musician, the power of whose harp or lyre drew wild beasts, and even rocks and trees, to follow him. His wife Eurydice having died, he descended into Hades to recover her if possible. His music, charming even the damned, prevailed with Pluto (the god of the lower world), who granted his prayer on condition that he should not look on Eurydice till he had led her completely out of Hades and into the upper world. Unfortunately, on their way upwards, he turned to see if she was following him; and she was caught back" (Masson). Comp. Il Pens. 105, Lyc. 58.

146. golden slumber. 'Golden' may here mean simply 'happy,' or it may be used because Orpheus is amongst the gods. Homer often applies 'golden' to that which belongs to the gods. Comp. aurea quies, in Milton's Eleg. iii.

147. Elysian flowers: Elysium was the abode of the spirits of the blessed, where they wandered amidst flowers and beauties of every kind. Comp. Com. 257, 996.

148. 'Such music as would have moved Pluto to set Eurydice completely free.' In Quint. Nov. 23, Milton calls Pluto summanus, chief of the dead.

149. to have quite set free: 'to have set' is here infinitive of result, and the perfect tense denotes something that had not been accomplished and is no longer possible: comp. the meanings of 'he hoped to be present' and 'he hoped to have been present.' Quite = unconditionally or completely.

150. Eurydice: see note on l. 145 above; also Il Pens. 105.

151. These delights, etc.: the last two lines of the poem recall the closing lines of Marlowe's Passionate Shepherd—

"If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me and be my love."

Milton here accepts the mood of Mirth, but only on the condition that its pleasures are such as he has enumerated.

IL PENSEROSO.

1. Hence : comp. note on L'Allegro 1. The opening lines recall certain lines by Sylvester—

“Hence, hence, false pleasures, momentary joys, Mocke us no more with your illuding toyes!”

vain deluding Joys : ‘vain’ is the Lat. vanus, empty, which is always opposed to vera, true. In L'Allegro the poet has described true mirth; and now ‘to commendation of the true, he joins condemnation of the false.’ ‘Deluding’ is deceitful, not what it appears to be.

2. These ‘Joys’ are said to be the brood (i.e. breed or offspring) of Folly by no father, in order to imply that they are the product of pure or absolute foolishness; they are by nature essentially and altogether foolish. So the goddess Night, one of the first of created beings, is said by Greek poets to have given birth without a husband to Death, Dreams, Sleep, etc.

Notice the use of the cognate words ‘brood’ and ‘bred’ in the same line.

3. How little you bested; of how little avail you are. ‘Bested’ is the present indicative, but the past participle is the only part of the verb now in common use, as in the phrase ‘to be hard bested,’ i.e. to be in sore need of help. ‘To stead’ occurs frequently in Shakespeare in a transitive sense = to profit, to assist, but the word ‘stead’ now occurs only in phrases, e.g. ‘to stand in good stead,’ and in compounds, e.g. steadfast, steady, homestead, bedstead, instead, etc.: comp. names of places, e.g. Hampstead, Kronstadt, etc. Its root is the verb ‘stand,’ and its literal sense is ‘place.’

4. all the fixèd mind: satisfy the thoughtful or sober mind; comp. Spenser’s F. Q. iv. 7.

toys, trifles. In the Anat. of Mel. we read of persons who “complain of toys, and fear without a cause.”

5. idle brain, foolish mind. The Old Eng. idel means ‘empty or vain’; in this sense we speak of ‘an idle dream.’ ‘Brain’ may be used here for mind, but it may be noted that, just as melancholy was supposed to be due to a certain humour of the body, so ‘a cold and moist brain’ was believed to be an inseparable companion of folly.

6. fancies fond, foolish imaginations. ‘Fond’ has here its primary sense of ‘foolish,’ fanned being the past participle of an old verb fennen, to be foolish. It is now used to express great liking or affection, the idea of folly having been almost lost, except in certain uses of the word in the north of England and in Scotland. Chaucer uses fonne = a fool, and fondling is still used either as a term of endearment or to denote a fool. It may be noted that in a similar way the word dote originally meant 'to be silly' and now 'to love excessively.' Comp. Lyc. 56, Son. xix. 8, Sams. Agon. 1686.

6. possess, occupy, fill: 'occupy the imaginations of the foolish with gaudy shapes or appearances.' In the English Bible we read of "a man possessed of a devil," i.e. occupied by an evil spirit.

For 'shapes,' comp. L'Alleg. 4.

7. thick, abundant, close together, here qualifying 'shapes': comp. "thick-coming fancies," Macbeth, v. 3. The different senses of the word are seen in 'thick as hail,' 'thick fluid,' 'thickly populated,' 'thick-head,' thick-skinned,' 'a thick fog,' 'a thick stick,' etc.

8. motes, particles of dust: here called 'gay' because dancing in the sunbeam. See Matt. vii. 3.

people the sun-beams. The specks of dust are said to people or occupy the sunbeams because it is chiefly in the direct rays of the sun that they become visible. By using the verb 'to people' Milton strengthens the comparison between them and the shapes or images that occupy the idle imagination.

9. likest, adj. superlative degree, qualifying 'shapes.' 'Like' is now an exception to the rule for the formation of the comparative and superlative forms of monosyllabic adjectives: we say 'more like,' 'most like.' But, in Milton's time, there was greater grammatical freedom, and in Comus, 57 he uses "more like." He also has such forms as resolutest, exquisitest, elegantest, moralest, etc., which according to present usage are inadmissible. In such phrases as 'like his father,' 'like' has come to have the force of a preposition, but in the phrase 'likest hovering dreams,' the noun may be regarded as being in the dative case (adverbial dative).

10. fickle pensioners ... train, inconstant attendants of sleep. Morpheus, the son of Sleep and the god of Dreams: the name means literally 'the shaper,' he who creates those shapes or images seen in dreams. Morpheus was generally represented with a cup in one hand and in the other a bunch of poppies, from which opium is prepared: hence the word 'morphia.'

'Pensioners,' followers. Queen Elizabeth had a bodyguard of handsome young men of noble birth, whom she styled her Pensioners. A 'pensioner' is strictly one who receives a pension, and hence a dependent. 'Train,' something drawn along (Lat. traho, to draw); hence train of a dress (line 34), of carriages, of followers.

See note on L'Allegro, 10, regarding the imagery and metre of the first ten lines of this poem.

11. hall! an old form of salutation, meaning 'may you be in health': the word is cognate with hale, heal, etc.

12. divinest. The superlative degree of adjectives is often used in Latin to mark a high degree of a quality, when the thing spoken of is not compared with the rest of a class. This is the absolute use of the superlative, as here.

13. visage, face, mien (Lat. visum, 'that which is seen'). The word is now mostly used to express contempt.

14. To hit the sense, etc.: to be distinguishable by human eyes. It is a fact that light may be of such intensity that the sense of sight loses all discriminative power. So we speak of a 'blinding' flash of light. For the use of the verb 'hit' compare Arcades, 77; in Antony and Cleop. ii. 2 Shakespeare speaks of a perfume hitting the sense of smell. The expression is obsolete.

15. weaker view, feeble power of vision. 'Weaker' is used absolutely: comp. 'divinest,' l. 12, and 'profaner,' l. 140. This is also a Latin usage.

16. O'erlaid, overlaid, covered, in order to reduce the intensity of the brightness of Melancholy's face. Milton thus skilfully converts the association of blackness and melancholy, which in L'Allegro makes her repulsive, into an expression of praise, and at the same time connects Melancholy with Wisdom—one of the purposes of the poem. In the Anat. of Mel. there is a reference to the disputed question whether 'all learned men, famous philosophers, and lawgivers have been melancholy.'

Comp. Exodus, xxxiv. 29, where Moses is said, after having been in God's presence, to have covered his face with a veil in order that the children of Israel might be able to look upon him.

staid, steady, sober, grave: the root is 'stay.'

17. Black, but etc. There is an ellipsis here, the construction being: (It is true that she is) black, but (it is) such black as might become a beautiful princess like Prince Memnon's sister.

such as: see note on L'Alleg. 29: comp. lines 106, 145.

in esteem, in our estimation. 'Esteem' as a verb is now used only to express high regard for a person; but the noun, though chiefly used in the same sense, may be used along with adjectives which convey a contrary meaning, e.g. poor esteem, low esteem, etc. 'Esteem,' 'aim,' and 'estimate' are cognate (Lat. aestimo).

18. Prince Memnon's sister: Memnon, the son of Tithonus and Eos (Aurora), was king of the Ethiopians, and fought in aid of Priam in the Trojan war; he was killed by Achilles. Though dark-skinned, he was famous for his beauty, and his sister (Hemera) would presumably be even more beautiful. The morning dew-drops were said by the ancient Greeks to be the tears of Aurora for her dead son, Memnon.

18. beseem, suit, become. This is the original sense of the simple verb seem; compare the adjective seemly=becoming, decent. 'Beseem' here governs 'sister' and 'queen.'

19. starred Ethiop queen: Cassiopea, wife of Cepheus, king of Ethiopia. According to one version of her story, she boasted that the beauty of her daughter Andromeda exceeded that of the Nereids; according to another version (adopted by Milton) it was her own beauty of which she boasted. For her presumption Ethiopia was ravaged by a sea-monster, from whose jaws Andromeda was saved by her lover Perseus. After death both mother and daughter were starred, i.e. changed into stars or constellations. This is probably why Milton calls the former 'starred': it might, however, mean 'placed amongst the stars,' or even 'adorned with stars,' as she was so represented in old charts of the heavens.

20, 1. above the Sea-Nymphs: this is an instance of elliptical comparison (comparatio compendiaria), the full construction being, 'to set her beauty's praise above (that of) the Sea-Nymphs.'

21. 'And (by so doing) offended their powers.' 'Powers'=divinities (Lat. numina).

22. higher far descended, far more highly descended. 'Higher' is an adverb modifying 'descended.' 'To be of high descent'='to be of noble birth.'

23. Thee is the object and Vesta the nom. of 'bore.'

bright-haired: with this compound adjective compare neat-handed, smooth-shaven, civil-suited, dewy-feathered, wide-watered, fresh-blown, high-embowed, etc., all of which occur in these poems. They consist of an adjective and a participle, the adjective representing an adverb.

Vesta. As in the case of Mirth, Milton gives Melancholy that genealogy which he thinks best suited to his purpose. Vesta, among the Romans, was the goddess of the domestic hearth; every dwelling was, therefore, in a sense a temple of Vesta. Her symbol was a fire kept burning on her altar by the Vestals, her virgin priestesses; and by making her the mother of Melancholy, Milton signifies that the melancholy of Il Penseroso is not the gloominess of the misanthrope nor the unhappiness of the man of impure heart, but the contemplative disposition of a pure and sympathetic soul.

long of yore, long years ago. 'Of yore' is an adverbial phrase like 'of old' and is modified by 'long.' The original sense of 'yore' is 'of years,' i.e. in years past.

24. solitary Saturn. The Romans attributed the introduction of the habits of civilized life to Saturn, the son of Uranus and Terra, and it seems to be for this reason that Milton makes Vesta, the pure goddess of the hearth, his daughter. He is called 'solitary' either because he devoured his own offspring or because he was dethroned by his sons; in either case it is clear that Milton signifies that Melancholy comes from Solitude or Retirement. In astrology the planet Saturn was supposed, by its influence, to cause melancholy, and persons of a gloomy temperament are said to be Saturnine; in the old science of palmistry also, there was a line on the palm of the hand called the Saturnine line, which was believed to indicate melancholy.

25. His daughter she; she was his daughter. Some editors read 'she (being) his daughter,' making the construction absolute. But it must be remembered that in Latin the noun or pronoun in the absolute clause cannot be the subject or object of the principal clause, as it would be here; and, further, the punctuation favours the view that 'his daughter she' is to be taken as an independent clause.

26. was not held a stain, was not considered to be a reproach. Mythological genealogies are apparently governed by no law. 'Held' is here a verb of incomplete predication.

27. Oft, original form of 'often,' which was at first used only before vowels or the letter h: comp. L'Allegro, 53.

glimmering ... glades. 'Glimmer' is a frequentative of gleam, i.e. gleaming at intervals. 'Glade' is an open space in a wood.

29. woody Ida. This probably refers to Mt. Ida in the island of Crete; Zeus or Jupiter was said to have been brought up in a cave in that mountain, though some traditions connect his name with Mt. Ida in Asia Minor. Here Saturn met Vesta before Jove (i.e. Jupiter) was born. Saturn's reign was called the Golden Age of Italy.

30. yet, as yet, up to that time. In modern English we cannot omit 'as' before 'yet' when 'yet' precedes the verb; if we do, the meaning of 'yet' would be changed to 'nevertheless.' In Shakespeare this omission of 'as' before 'yet' is common in negative clauses.

fear of Jove. Saturn was dethroned by his sons, and his realm distributed by lot between Jupiter, Neptune, and Pluto. See Comus 20, and Keats' Hyperion.

31. pensive, thoughtful: comp. Lyc. 147. It is from Lat. pendo, to weigh: so we speak of a person weighing his words.

Nun, a woman who devotes herself to celibacy and seclusion; hence the word is well applied to the daughter of pure Vesta and solitary Saturn: comp. l. 103.

31. devout; radically the same word as 'devoted'; the former is used in the general sense of 'pious,' applied to those given up or vowed to religious exercises; while the latter is used of strong attachment of any kind,—to God, to any sacred purpose, to friends, etc.

32. steadfast, constant, resolute: comp. 'staid,' line 16; and 'bested,' line 3. The suffix -fast means 'firm,' as in the phrases 'fast bound,' 'fast asleep,' 'fast colour,' and in the words 'fasten' and 'fastness.'

demure, modest. Trench points out that this is the primary meaning of the word, though it now implies that the modesty is assumed. It is from the French de (bons) meurs, i.e. of good manners. The Latin word mores (manners) was used in the sense of 'character'; hence our word moral. For the form of the word, comp. 'debonair,' L'Alleg. 24.

33. All: this may be taken as an adverb modifying the phrase 'in a robe of darkest grain.' Comp. 'all in white' (Son. xxiii.); all = from head to foot.

grain, purple colour. It is interesting to trace the various uses of this word to its primary sense 'a small seed.' It came to be applied to any small seed-like object, then to any minute particle (e.g. grains of sand); it was thus used of the small cochineal insects, whose bodies yield a variety of red dyes, and finally to the dyes so obtained. Hence 'grain,' as used here, denotes a dark purple, sometimes called Tyrian purple. But, as these dyes were very durable, 'to dye in grain' came to mean 'to dye deeply' or 'to dye in fast colours'; and, more generally still, we speak of a habit or a vice being 'ingrained' in a person's character. Comp. Com. 750, Par. Lost, v. 285, xi. 242, and Chaucer's Squire's Tale—

"So deep in grain he dyed his colours."

(The word 'grain,' from its sense of 'particle,' is applied also to the arrangement of particles or the texture of wood or stone, and even of cloth.)

35. And (in) sable stole of cypress lawn, in a black scarf of fine linen crape.

'Sable,' here used in the sense of 'black,' this being the colour of the best sable fur. The stole (Lat. stola) worn by Roman ladies was a long flounced robe, reaching to the feet, short-sleeved, and girded round the waist. Milton, however, means a hood or veil, which was first passed round the neck and then over the face: such a stole was worn to denote mourning. The word is now used only of a long narrow scarf, fringed at both ends, and worn by ecclesiastics.

'Cypress' (often spelt cyprus) by itself denotes 'crape,' a word which is probably from the same root (Lat. crispus, curled); when combined with 'lawn,' it denotes crape of the finest kind. The spelling gave rise to the theory that 'cypress' was so called because first made in the island of Cyprus (which has given a name to copper), but this is doubtful.

'Lawn' is really a sort of fine linen: a bishop's surplice is made of it. Comp. Pope's line—

"A saint in crape is twice a saint in lawn."

36. decent shoulders. The Latin decens meant either 'graceful' or 'becoming.' Milton uses the word in the former sense elsewhere, and may also do so here. If it is used in the latter sense it is proleptic, the stole being drawn over the shoulders so as to be becoming.

37. wonted state, usual stately manner. Here 'state' refers to the dignified approach of the goddess: in Arc. 81 it has its older and more restricted sense = seat of honour. 'To keep state' was to occupy the seat of honour.

'Wonted' = accustomed. This is apparently the past participle of a verb to wont (see Com. 332); but the old verb wonen, to dwell or to be accustomed, had woned or wont for its participle. The fact that 'wont' was a participle was forgotten, and a new form was introduced—'wonted' (= won-ed-ed). The two forms have now distinct uses: 'wont' is used as a noun = custom, or as a participial adjective with the verb 'to be' (see line 123); 'wonted' is used only as an adjective, never predicatively.

38. musng gait, contemplative manner of walking. 'Gait' is cognate with 'gate' = a way, perhaps the same word: it is a mistake to connect either of these words radically with the verb 'go.'

39. And (with) looks commercing, etc. Milton may mean not only that the looks of the goddess were turned to heaven, but also that she was communing with heaven: this would give additional significance to l. 40. The use of the word 'commerce' has been restricted in two ways—(1) by being applied only to trade, whereas Shakespeare, Milton, and others use it of any kind of intercourse, and (2) by being used only as a noun, whereas Milton used it as verb and noun. He also accents it here on the second syllable. The Latin commercium was of general application: comp. Ovid's Tristia, v. 10, "Exercent illi sociæ commercia linguæ."

40. rapt, enraptured: to be rapt in thought is to be so occupied with one's thoughts as to become oblivious to what is around, as if the mind or soul had been carried away (Lat. raptus, seized): comp. 'ecstasies,' l. 165 and note, and Com. 794. Milton also used the word of the actual snatching away of a person: 'What accident hath rapt him from us,' Par. Lost, ii. 40. (The student should note that there is a participle 'rapt' from the English verb 'rap,' to seize quickly; from this root comes 'rape,' while 'rapine,' 'rapid,' 'rapacious,' etc., are from the Latin root.)

40. soul, nominative absolute. On the expressiveness of the eye, comp. Tennyson's line—

"Her eyes are homes of silent prayer."

41. There, in that position.

held in holy passion still, held motionless through holy emotion. 'Passion' (Lat. pator) is here used in its primary sense of 'feeling or emotion': it is used in this sense in the Bible (Acts, xiv. 15, Jas. v. 17). It was then applied to pain or suffering, as in the phrase 'Passion week.' The word is now used chiefly of anger or eager desire. There are two cognate adjectives, patient and passive.

Forget thyself to marble, become as insensible as a marble statue to all around. Comp. On Shakespeare, 14. The same idea occurs in the phrase 'to be petrified with astonishment.'

43. With a sad leaden, etc.: with the eyes cast down towards the earth as if in sadness or deep thought. "Leaden-coloured eye-sockets betoken melancholy, or excess of thoughtfulness" (Masson). The poet Gray has the same idea: "With leaden eye that loves the ground."

44. fix, subjunctive after 'till,' because referring to the future. The subjunctive mood after 'till' and 'when' is now generally superseded by the indicative: comp. lines 44, 122, 173.

as fast, as steadfastly (as they were before fixed on the skies): see note on l. 38.

46. Spare Fast. Frugality of life is here personified and represented as lean. Milton, in his writings, frequently associates plain living with high thinking, and in his own habits he was extremely frugal and abstemious. In his sixth Elegy he declares that, though the elegiac poets may be inspired by good cheer, the poet who wishes to sing of noble and elevated themes (to 'diet with the gods') must follow the frugal precepts of Pythagoras: 'the poet is sacred; he is the priest of heaven, and his bosom conceives, and his mouth utters, the hidden god.' This is the idea conveyed in lines 47, 48. See Comus 764 for the praises of temperance, and also Son. xx.

doth diet And hears. There is here a change of grammatical construction due to change of thought: we should say either 'doth diet and (doth) hear' or 'diets and hears.'

47. Muses: the goddesses who presided over the different kinds of poetry and the arts and sciences were daughters of Jupiter, and lived on Mount Olympus.

48. Aye, ever, always. 'Sing,' 'infinitive after 'hears.'

50. trim, well-kept, and pleasing to the eye: comp. L'Alleg.

75. In Milton's time the style of gardening was extremely artificial. Shakespeare and Milton both have the word 'trim' in the sense of 'adornment.'

his, is not here used for its, Leisure being personified.

51. first and chiefest, above all. According to modern usage the form 'chiefest' would be a double superlative, but, as Milton avoids double comparatives and superlatives, it is probable that 'chief' is not to be taken in its strict sense, but merely as denoting a high degree of importance; it would therefore admit of comparison. Shakespeare, on the contrary, often used a double comparative or superlative merely for emphasis.

52. yon, yonder, an adverb; in Milton it is generally an adjective: comp. Arc. 36. It is now used only as an adjective, and 'yonder' as an adjective or adverb.

soars on golden wing, etc. "A daring use of the great vision, in Ezekiel, chap. x., of the sapphire throne, the wheels of which were four cherubs, each wheel or cherub full of eyes all over, while in the midst of them, and underneath the throne, was a burning fire. Milton, whether on any hint from previous Biblical commentators I know not, ventures to name one of these cherubs who guide the fiery wheelings of the visionary throne. He is the Cherub Contemplation. It was by the serene faculty named Contemplation that one attained the clearest notion of divine things,—mounted, as it were, into the very blaze of the Eternal" (Masson). In Com. 307 Milton makes Contemplation the nurse of Wisdom.

'Cherub' and 'Contemplation' are in apposition to 'him,' l. 52. 'Contemplation' is to be pronounced here as a word of five syllables.

55. hist along: imperative of the verb 'to hist' = to bring silently along, or to call to in a whisper. The word is here very expressive; Silence is summoned by the word which is used to command silence. There is no doubt that 'hist,' 'hush,' and 'whist' are imitative sounds all used originally as interjections; they were afterwards used as verbs, their past participles being hist, hushed, and whist. Hence Skeat thinks that 'hist' in the above line is a past participle = hushed, i.e. "bring along with thee the mute, hushed Silence." This is an improbable rendering. 'Hist' is now used only as an interjection, and 'whist' only as an interjection and the name of a game at cards.

It may be noted that as Silence is here personified, there is no tautology in describing her as 'mute.'

56. 'Less, unless. 'Un' in the word 'unless' is not the negative prefix, but the preposition 'on.'

56. Philomel, the nightingale (Greek Philomēla = lover of melody). According to legend, she was a daughter of Pandion, King of Attica, and was changed at her own prayer into a nightingale to escape the vengeance of her brother-in-law Tereus. See Son. i. and notes.

deign a song, be pleased to sing (Lat. dignor = to think worthy).

57. plight, strain. There are two words 'plight' of diverse origin and use, and editors of Milton differ as to which is used here. (1) 'Plight' = something plaited or interwoven, and so applicable to a strain of sounds interwoven, as in the nightingale's song: Milton, in this sense, speaks of the 'plighted clouds,' Com. 301. (2) 'Plight' = something promised, a duty or condition, now chiefly used to signify an unfortunate condition (A.S. pliht, danger). The former is probably the meaning here.

58. Smoothing the rugged brow of Night, i.e. softening the stern aspect of night. See the same idea of the power of music repeated in Com. 251—

"Smoothing the raven down
Of darkness till it smiled."

'Smoothing' qualifies 'Philomel.'

59. While Cynthia, etc.: the nightingale's song being so sweet that the moon in rapture checks herself in her course in order to listen.

Cynthia, a surname of the Greek Artemis, the goddess of the moon, as Cynthius was of her brother Apollo, the god of the sun; both were born on Mount Cynthus in the isle of Delos. The Romans identified their goddess Diana with Artemis, and in this character she rode in a chariot drawn by four stags. Milton, however, here and elsewhere, speaks of dragons being yoked to her chariot: this applies rather to Ceres, the goddess of plenty. Shakespeare refers frequently to the "dragons of the Night."

On 'check,' see note on L'Alleg. 96.

60. the accustomed oak, the oak where the nightingale was accustomed to sing, and where the poet perhaps had often listened to it. He may refer (as Masson suggests) to some particular oak over which he had himself often watched the moon, thus giving a personal touch to his bold fancy. The use of the definite article 'the' favours this view.

61. shunn'st the noise of folly, avoidest the revels of the foolish. Noise, in Elizabethan writers, has often the sense of 'music,' and it is used by Ben Jonson and Shakespeare to denote 'a company of musicians.' The 'noise of folly' might thus mean 'company of foolish singers or revellers.'

62. Most musical, most melancholy! As in l. 57 the poet associated sweetness and sadness, so also in this line, almost as if music and melancholy were causally related. Comp. Shelley, To a Skylark—

“Our sincerest laughter
With some pain is fraught;

Our sweetest songs are those that tell of saddest thought.”

63. I often woo thee, chauntress, among the woods in order to hear thy even-song. ‘Chauntress,’ the feminine of ‘chaunter,’ one who chants or sings. ‘To enchant’ is to charm by song.

65. missing thee, if I miss thee, i.e. if I do not hear thy song.

unseen: see note on ‘not unseen,’ L’Alleg. 57. It has been argued from these words that Il Penseroso must have been written before L’Allegro.

66. smooth-shaven green, where the grass has been newly cut. ‘Green’ as a noun applies to ‘a flat stretch of grass-grown land.’ For the form of the compound adjective see note on L’Alleg. 22, and comp. ‘wide-watered,’ ‘civil-suited,’ ‘high-embowed,’ etc.

67. wandering moon. The epithet ‘wandering’ is frequently applied to the moon in Latin and Italian poetry: “vaga luna,” Horace, Sat. i. 8; “errantem lunam,” Virgil, Æn. i. 742.

68. noon: here used in its general sense = highest position; comp. the general use of the word ‘zenith.’ Ben Jonson speaks of the “noon of night,” and Milton in Sams. Agon. applies it to men—“amidst their highth of noon.” The word is in prose usually restricted to the sense of ‘mid-day’; it is derived from the Lat. nonus, ninth, and the church services held at the ninth hour of the day (3 P.M.) were called nones. When these were changed to midday, the word ‘noon’ was used to denote that hour, and hence its present use.

Some interpret ‘highest noon’ as implying that the moon is nearly full.

70. pathless way: contrast with P.L. iv. 976, “the road of Heaven star-paved.”

72. Stooping: Keightley’s note on this is: “He alludes here to that curious optical illusion by which, as the clouds pass over the moon, it seems to be she, not they, that is in motion. This is peculiarly observable when the wind is high, and the clouds are driven along with rapidity.” ‘Stooping’ and ‘riding’ are co-ordinate attributes of ‘moon.’

73. plat of rising ground, ‘level top of some hillock.’ ‘Plat’ is a plot or small piece of level ground: plot is the A.S. form of the word. Its relation etymologically with flat plate, etc., is doubtful, though commonly taken for granted.

74. curfew sound. 'Curfew' (Fr. couvre-feu = fire-cover), the bell that was rung at eight or nine o'clock in the evening as a signal that all fires and lights were to be extinguished. As this custom was still in force in Milton's time the sound would be familiar to him, though he is not here closely detailing his own experiences. It must be remembered also that 'curfew' or 'curfew bell' was sometimes used in the more general sense of 'a bell that sounded the hours.' 'Sound,' infinitive after 'hear'; 'to' (the so-called sign of the infinitive) being omitted after such verbs as make, see, hear, feel, bid, etc.

75. some wide-watered shore, the shore of some wide 'water.' These words do not show whether the poet refers to a lake, a river (e.g. the Thames), or even the sea-shore, for the word water may be used of any of these, and shore may be employed in its primary sense of 'boundary' or 'edge.' It is pointed out by Masson that in every other case in which Milton uses the word 'shore' he refers to the sea or to some vast expanse of water. 'Some' shows that the poet is describing an ideal scene, not an actual one.

76. Swinging slow: this would be an apt description of the sound of the distant sea, but it more probably refers to the curfew. Shakespeare has 'sullen bell' (King Henry IV. Pt. II. i. 1). Notice the effect of the rhythm and alliteration of this line in bringing out the meaning.

77. air, weather, state of the atmosphere.

78. Some still removed place, some quiet and retired spot (comp. l. 81). The Latin participle remotus (=moved back) meant either 'retired' or 'distant': Milton here uses 'removed' in the former sense, and Shakespeare has the same usage, employing also the noun 'removedness'=solitude. In modern English, when 'remote' is used without any qualification, it almost always denotes distance, either in time or place.

will fit, will be suited to my mood. In lines 77, 78, we find a future tense both in the principal and conditional clauses. This sequence of tenses is allowable in English, but the tense of the conditional clause may be varied, e.g. :

- (1) Fut. Indic. "If the air will not permit," etc.
- (2) Pres. Indic. "If the air does not permit," etc.
- (3) Pres. Subjunc. "If the air do not permit," etc.

The first form is the least common, though many Indian students use it invariably : it is a good rule to avoid it.

79. through the room; adverbial phrase modifying 'to counterfeited.'

80. Teach light, etc. : the red-hot ashes merely serve to make the darkness visible. It will be observed that the poet has now shifted the scene from the country to the town, or at least from out-of-doors to indoors.

81. This line qualifies 'place,' line 78.

82. Save=except. The meaning is that the room would be perfectly quiet except for the chirping of the cricket on the hearth or the cry of the night-watchman. The cricket is an insect somewhat resembling a grasshopper, which makes a chirping noise.

83. bellman's drowsy charm. The watchman who, before the introduction of the modern police system, patrolled the streets at night, calling the hours, looking out for fires, thieves, and other nocturnal evils. He was accustomed to drawl forth scraps of pious poetry to 'charm' away danger. The word 'drowsy' may imply that these guardians of the night were of little use, being often half or wholly asleep.

84. nightly harm : comp. note on Arcades, 48.

85. let my lamp. "Evidently we are now back in the country, in the turret of some solitary mansion, where there are books, and perhaps astronomical instruments. How fine, however, not to give us the inside view of the turret-room first, but to imagine some one far off outside observing the ray of light slanting from its window!" (Masson). The construction is, 'Let (you) my lamp (to) be seen : 'let' is imperative, with an infinitive complement.

87. outwatch the Bear. 'Out' as a prefix here means beyond or over, as in outweigh, outvote, outwit, outrun, etc. ; and 'watch' = wake. "To outwatch the Bear" is therefore to remain awake till daybreak, for the constellation of the Great Bear does not set below the horizon in northern latitudes, and only vanishes on account of the daylight. Watch and wake are cognate with wait : hence Chaucer's allusion in the Squire's Tale, where the maker of the wonderful brass horse is said to "have waited many a constellation Ere he had done this operation."

88. With thrice great Hermes, i.e. reading the books attributed to Hermes Trismegistus (i.e. 'thrice-great'). He was an ancient Egyptian philosopher named Thot or Theut, whom the Greeks identified with their god Hermes (the Latin Mercury) ; the new Platonists regarded him as the source of all knowledge, even Pythagoras and Plato having (it was pretended) derived their philosophy from him. A large number of works, really composed in the fourth century A.D., were ascribed to him, the most important being the Poemander, a dialogue treating of nature, the creation of the world, the deity, the human soul, etc.

or unsphere The spirit of Plato, "or may bring back the spirit of Plato from heaven," i.e. may search out the doctrines of Plato by a careful study of his writings. 'Unsphere' is a hybrid (English and Greek); the verbal prefix denotes the reversal of an action as in unlock, unload, etc., and is distinct from the negative prefix in untrue, uncouth, etc. 'Unsphered' is obsolete, so is 'insphered' (Com. 3-6): we still speak, however, of a person's sphere or rank, but without the literal reference which the word always has in Milton's writings.

89. to unfold What worlds: infinitive of purpose = to unfold those worlds which, etc. The allusion is to one of Plato's dialogues, the Phaedo, in which he discusses the state of the soul after the death of the body. Comp. Comus 463-475.

91. forsook, forsaken. 'Forsook,' a form of the past tense, here used as a past participle. It must not be supposed that the word 'forsaken' did not exist. Milton, like Shakespeare (Othello iv. 2), deliberately uses a form of the past tense: comp. Arc. 4.

92. Her mansion in this fleshly nook, her temporary abode in the body. Trench points out that 'mansion' in our early literature is frequently used to denote a 'place of tarrying,' which might be for a longer or a shorter time: this is evidently the sense here: comp. Comus 2. The 'fleshly nook' is the body, so called in order to contrast it with the 'immortal mind.' Locke calls the body the 'clay cottage' of the mind, and in the Bible it is sometimes compared to a temple or tabernacle (2 Cor. v. 1, 2 Pet. i. 13): comp. 'earthy,' Son. xiv. 3.

The use of the possessive 'her' in this line may be explained by the fact that the Lat. mens (the mind) is feminine: it must be remembered also that its was not yet in general use and that Milton is fond of the feminine personification: comp. l. 143.

93. And of those demons. This, like 'worlds,' depends grammatically upon 'unfold,' but as 'to unfold of' is an awkward construction we may here supply some verb like 'tell.' This is an instance of zeugma.

In Plato's Timaeus, Phaedo, Critias, etc., we find references to the Greek daimona = spirits, who were not necessarily bad; in fact it was a subject of discussion with some of the Platonists whether there were bad, as well as good, spirits. During the Middle Ages the different orders and powers of demons or spirits were very variously stated: one writer (quoted in Anat. of Mel.) gives six kinds of sublunary spirits—"fiery, aerial, terrestrial, watery, and subterranean, besides fairies, satyrs, nymphs, etc." Milton here refers to four of these classes, each being conversant with one of the four elements—fire, air, water, earth. This division of the elements or elemental forms of matter dates from the time of the Greek philosopher Empedocles (B.C. 470).

95. consent; the demons are in sympathetic relation with certain planets and elements; e.g. one writer made "seven kinds of aethereal spirits or angels, according to the number of the seven planets," and in Par. Reg. ii. Milton represents the fallen angels as presiding, under Satan, as powers over earth, air, fire, and water, and causing storms and disasters.

'Consent' is here used in its radical sense (L. con, with, and sentire, to feel), an exact rendering of the Greek sym-pathy. Comp. 1 Henry VI. i. 1.

97. Sometime, on some occasion : comp. L'Alleg. 57. Il Penseroso here passes to the study of the greatest and most solemn tragic writers.

98. sceptred pall, kingly robe. Both the pall and the sceptre were insignia of royalty, and in ancient Greek tragedies the kings and queens wore a sleeved tunic (chiton) falling to the feet, and over this a shawl-like garment called by the Romans palla. Prof. Hales suggests that 'in sceptred pall' may here mean 'with pall and with sceptre,' i.e. two things are expressed by one : comp. ll. 75 and 146.

99. Presenting Thebes, etc. 'Present' is here used in its technical sense, 'to represent'; we now speak of a theatrical 'representation.' Comp. Arcades, sub-title.

Aeschylus has a drama called Seven against Thebes; this city is also referred to in the Antigone and Œdipus of Sophocles, and the Bacchae of Euripides. Pelops (from whom the Peloponnesus is said to have derived its name) was the father of Atreus and great-grandfather of Agamemnon; his name was so celebrated that it was constantly used by the poets in connection with his descendants and the cities they inhabited. And the 'tale of Troy divine' (i.e. the story of the Trojan war) is dealt with in various plays by Sophocles and Euripides. Troy is here called 'divine' because, during its long siege, the gods took the keenest interest in the contest.

101, 102. We do not know to what tragedies Milton refers; we cannot assert, though we may hope, that he includes some of Shakespeare's. He admired Shakespeare, but had a poor opinion of Elizabethan tragic drama as a whole. From first to last he took the classical tragedy as the proper model. Yet he had studied Shakespeare deeply, with traceable effects upon his own style.

buskined stage, the tragic drama. 'Buskin' (Lat. cothurnus) was a high-heeled boot worn by Greek tragic actors in order to add to their stature, and so to their dignity : comp. L'Alleg. 132. The words 'buskin' and 'sock' came to denote the kinds of drama to which they belonged; and even to express certain styles of composition: thus Quintilian says, "Comedy does not strut in tragic buskins, nor does tragedy step along in the slipper of comedy." Grammatically, 'what' is nom. to 'hath ennobled,' its suppressed antecedent being obj. of 'presenting.'

103. sad Virgin, i.e. Melancholy: comp. l. 31.

that thy power, etc.: 'would that thy power,' or 'I would that thy power.' This construction (which has all the force of an interjection) is often used to express a wish that cannot be realized. 'Raise' (l. 104), 'bid' (l. 105), and 'call' (l. 109) are all co-ordinate verbs.

104. Musæus, like Orpheus, a semi-mythological personage, represented as one of the earliest Greek poets. Milton here expresses a wish that his sacred hymns could be recovered. For 'bower,' comp. Son. viii. 9.

105. For the story of Orpheus, see note on L'Allegro, 145.

106. warbled to the string, sung to the accompaniment of a stringed instrument: see note on Arc. 87.

107. Drew iron tears. This expresses the inflexible nature of Pluto, the god of the lower world. In the same way we speak of an 'iron will,' 'iron rule,' etc.

109. him that, etc.: Chaucer, who left his Squire's Tale unfinished. In this tale (one of the richest of the Canterbury Tales) we read of the Tartar king, Cambus Khân. Chaucer, like Milton, writes the name as one word, but, unlike Milton, and more correctly, he does not accent the penult. The following extracts (from Tyrwhitt's edition of Chaucer) explain the allusions—

This noble king, this Tartar Cambuscan,
Had two sonnës by Elfeta his wife,
Of which the eldest son hight Algarsife,
That other was ycleped Camballo
A daughter had this worthy king also,
That youngest was, and hightë Canace . . . .
In at the hallë door all suddenly
There came a knight upon a steed of brass,
And in his hand a broad mirrör of glass;
Upon his thumb he had of gold a ring
And by his side a naked sword hanging.

The king of 'Araby and Ind' had sent the horse as a present to Cambuscan, and the mirror and ring to Canacë. Milton may have included Chaucer amongst the 'great bards' in whom Il Penseroso delighted, because the thought of the earliest Greek poets suggested Chaucer, "the well of English undefiled," or (as Masson thinks) because the reference to the lost poems of Greece suggested the unfinished poem of Chaucer. Milton was well acquainted with the Squire's Tale and with subsequent continuations of it (e.g. by Spenser).

112. who had Canacè to wife : (of him) who was Canacè's husband. Chaucer does not mention his name (except where he mistakenly calls him Camballo) : Spenser makes her the wife of Triamond. 'To wife'; in such phrases 'to' seems to denote the end or purpose.

113. That, rel. pronoun, antecedent Canacè.

virtuous, full of power or efficacy. The Lat. virtus = manly excellence. In the English Bible 'virtue' is used in the sense of strength or power (comp. Com. 165), and we still say 'by virtue of' = by the power of. But the adjective 'virtuous' now denotes only moral excellence.

The ring referred to above, when worn on the thumb or carried in the purse, enabled the wearer to understand the language of birds and the healing properties of all herbs. The glass or mirror enabled its owner to look into the future and into men's hearts.

114. of the wondrous horse, sc. the story. Readers of the Arabian Nights Entertainment will remember the story of the enchanted horse, regarding which Warton says : "The imagination of this story consists in Arabian fiction, engrafted on Gothic chivalry. Nor is this Arabian fiction purely the sport of arbitrary fancy; it is, in a great measure, founded on Arabian learning. The idea of a horse of brass took its rise from the mechanical knowledge of the Arabians, and their experiments in metals."

116. if aught else, whatever else. This is a Latinism : many clauses in Latin introduced by si quid, si quando, etc. are best introduced in English by such words as 'whatever,' 'when-ever,' etc.

great bards beside, other great bards. The poets referred to are such as Ariosto, Tasso, and Spenser, in whose romances Milton was well read. In one of his prose works he says : "I may tell you whither my younger feet wandered. I betook me among those lofty fables and romances which recount in solemn cantos the deeds of knighthood." 'Beside' as an adverb is now almost displaced by the later form 'besides.'

117. sage and solemn tunes, wise and dignified verse, as that of the Spenserian stanza. For 'solemn' see Arc. 7, note.

118. turneys. 'Turney,' a form of 'tourney' (Fr. tourney), a mock-fight, so called from the swift turning of the horses in the combat. 'Tournament' is merely a Latinised form of the word; comp. L'Alleg. 123.

trophies hung. These were arms or banners taken from a defeated enemy and hung up as memorials. The word is from the Greek tropé, a turning, i.e. causing the enemy to turn.

119. enchantments, use of magic arts. Radically, 'enchantment' = magic verses sung when it was desired to place a person under some spell (Lat. incantare, to repeat a chant): comp. lines 63, 83, and Lyc. 59.

120. Where more is meant, etc.: in which poetry there is a deeper meaning than is apparent on the surface. The poets referred to in l. 116 had generally a high moral purpose in their writings; e.g. Spenser's Faerie Queene is a noble spiritual allegory, the particular references in it being "secondary senses lying only on the surface of the main design." The same is true of Tasso's Enchanted Forest.

121. Thus, Night, etc.: 'thus let me be often seen by thee, O Night, in thy pale course.'

pale career. Contrast 'pale' with the epithets applied by poets to the dawn, e.g. 'ruddy,' 'rosy-fingered,' etc.

122. civil-suited Morn. In L'Allegro the Sun appears in royal robes and surrounded by his liveried servants; in Il Penseroso Morning comes clad in the garb of a simple citizen and attended by wind and rain.

'Civil,' from Lat. civis, a citizen, is here used in its primary sense. It is opposed to military or ecclesiastical, as in 'civil engineer,' 'civil service.' It has also the meaning of 'polite' or 'well-mannered,' as contrasted with boorish or rustic manners; but it has lost (as Trench points out) all its deeper significance: "a civil man once was one who fulfilled all the duties and obligations flowing from his position as a civis."

123. tricked and frounced: literally, 'adorned with fine clothes and having the hair frizzled or curled.' In Lycidas, 170, the sun is said to trick his beams: the verb is cognate with the noun 'trick,' something neatly contrived.

'Frounced': the word originally meant 'to wrinkle the brow,' and there is an old French phrase, fronser le front, with this meaning. The present form of the word is 'founce.'

as, in the manner in which. For 'wont' see note on line 37.

124. Attic boy; the Athenian youth Cephalus, beloved by Eos (Aurora), the goddess of the dawn. It was while he was stag-hunting on Mount Hymettus in Attica that she fell in love with him.

125. kerchief, having the head covered. 'Kerchief' is exactly similar in form to 'cur-few' (q.v. line 74); it is from Fr. couvre-chef, head-cover. The original meaning being overlooked we have now such compounds as 'hand-kerchief,' 'neckerchief,' 'pocket-handkerchief.'

comely, becoming: comp. Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 3. 26.

126. piping, whistling : 'loud,' used adverbially.

127. ushered, introduced (Lat. ostium, an entrance). The word here qualifies 'Morn.' 'Still' is an adjective qualifying 'shower': notice Milton's fondness for this word.

128. hath blown his fill, has exhausted itself, has ceased. As there is no personification here, his = its. See Nat. Ode, 106, note on Milton's use of its. The word is almost entirely ignored by Milton, being used only three times in the whole of his poetry; this arose from the fact that its was then a new word, and also because he did not seem to feel the need for it, its place being taken in his involved syntax by the relative pronoun and other connectives, or by his, her, thereof, etc. The word its does not occur in the language till the end of the sixteenth century, the possessive case of the neuter pronoun it and of the masculine he being his. This gave rise to confusion when the old gender system decayed, and the form its gradually came into use until, by the end of the seventeenth century, it was generally adopted.

Grammatically 'his fill' denotes the extent to which 'the gust hath blown,' and is therefore an adverbial adjunct. Some, however, would explain it as a cognate objective.

129. Ending ... With minute-drops; the end of the shower being marked by drops falling at intervals. 'Minute' (accent on first syllable) is applied as an adjective to something occurring at short intervals, once a minute or so, e.g. 'minute-guns,' 'minute-bells,' etc. Minute (accent on second syllable) = very small.

130. eaves, projecting edge of the roof. This word is singular, though often regarded as plural: the final 's' is part of the root, and the plural properly should be eaveses (which is not used). An 'eaves-dropper' is strictly one who stands under the drops that fall from the eaves, hence a 'secret listener.'

132. flaring, glittering or flashing; generally applied to a light whose brightness is offensive to the eye, and is so used here to suit the mood of Il Penseroso. 'Flare' is cognate with 'flash.'

me, Goddess, etc.; i.e. Melancholy, bring me, etc.

133. twilight groves and shadows brown, groves with such half-light as there is in the twilight, when the shadows cast on the ground are not deep black, but (as Milton says) 'brown.' Comp. Par. Lost, iv. 254—

"Where the unpierced shade Imbrowned the noon-tide bowers."

Also Par. Lost, ix. 1086—

"Where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sunlight, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening!"

The Italians express the approach of evening by a word meaning 'to embrown.'

134. Sylvan: Sylvanus, the god of fields and forests. 'Sylvan' is a misspelling of 'silvan' (Lat. silva, a wood); the spelling in y was made in order to assimilate silva to the Greek kylé, a wood, but the radical connection is doubtful.

135. monumental oak. The obvious meaning of 'monumental' is, as Masson suggests, 'memorial,' 'old,' 'telling of bygone years.' An aged oak is a memorial of the flight of time; it suggests also massiveness.

136. rude axe with heavèd stroke. This is an example of chiasmus, the epithet 'rude' belonging to 'stroke,' and 'heavèd' to 'axe.' 'Heavèd' = uplifted.

137. nymphs, i.e. wood nymphs: comp. line 154.

daunt, to frighten (from Lat. domitare, to subdue; hence 'indomitable' = not able to be daunted).

138. hallowed haunt, abode sacred to them.

139. covert, sheltered spot, thicket: a 'covert' is strictly a covered place.' 𐄂

140. no profaner eye, no unsympathetic eye. 'Profaner' = somewhat profane; on this Latin use of the comparative see l. 15, note. 'Profane' (Lat. pro, before, and fanum, a temple) was applied to those who, not being initiated into the sacred rites, were compelled to wait outside the temple during the sacrifices; hence it came to mean (1) 'not sacred,' as in the phrase 'profane history,' and (2) 'impure,' as in profane language. Il Penseroso applies it to those not in sympathy with his mood.

141. day's garish eye. Milton frequently speaks of the 'eye of day' (comp. Son. i. 5, Com. 978, Lyc. 26). 'Garish' = staring or glaring, generally used, as here, to express dislike, though some Elizabethan writers use it in a good sense. There is an old English verb gare = to stare, formed, by the change of s to r, from A.S. gasen.

142. honeyed thigh. If this means that the bee collects honey on its thigh, it is a mistake; it is the pollen or flower-dust that is thus collected, while the honey is sucked into the animal's body. Virgil, however, who probably knew more about bees than Milton did, uses a similar expression (Ecl. i. 56).

143. her: see notes on lines 92 and 128.

sing, hum: the verb sing is very variously used by Elizabethan writers.

145. consort, harmony, by old writers often confused with concert (a word not found in Milton's poems). He used the noun consort in various senses, e.g. a companion, a wife, agreement of sounds, harmony of musical instruments (see note, Nat. Ode, 132), a company of musicians (At a Solemn Music, 27).

146. Entice: the nominatives of this verb are 'bee' and 'waters.' Its meaning is 'to induce to come'; by a common metaphor sleep is represented as shy, as easily frightened, as requiring to be wooed or enticed. Comp. 2nd Henry IV. iii. 1.

dewy-feathered Sleep. We have here one of those compound epithets (so frequent in Milton) which have been described as poems in miniature. In most of these the first word qualifies the second, so that 'dewy-feathered sleep' may mean 'Sleep with dewy feathers.' The god of Sleep (l. 10) was represented as winged, and he may be supposed to shake dew from his wings as the Archangel in Par. Lost v. 286 diffused fragrance by shaking his plumes.

It is common, however, for poets to speak of the dew of sleep (comp. Richard III. iv. 1, Julius Caesar ii. 1) without any reference to its being winged: we might therefore take 'dewy-feathered' to have the force of two co-ordinate adjectives 'dewy' and 'feathered': see note on l. 98.

147-150. This passage is a difficult one: Prof. Masson reads it thus, 'Let some strange mysterious dream wave (i.e. move to and fro) at his (i.e. Sleep's) wings in airy stream,' etc. It is customary for poets to speak of Dreams as the messengers of Sleep (see l. 10); here a dream is borne on the wings of Sleep and hovers over the poet in an airy stream of vivid images portrayed upon his mental eye.

Some, however, take 'his wings' to denote the Dream's wings, in which case at is difficult of explanation: one editor therefore suggests that it be struck out, and that 'wave' be regarded as a transitive verb! See Drinkwater's A Book for Bookmen for Coleridge's construction: "And at his wings (dewy-feathered) softly laid on my eyelids let some strange Dream flow waveringly in airy stream of lively portraiture."

149. lively has its radical sense of 'life-like'; so we speak of a 'life-like portrait,' a vivid picture (Lat. vivus, living).

151. breathe: a verb in the imperative addressed to the goddess Melancholy, as 'bring,' 'hide,' and 'let' in the preceding lines. (Some would take it as an infinitive depending on 'let.')

153. to mortals good, good to mortals. 'Good' = propitious; comp. Lyc. 184. In this line 'Spirit' is to be pronounced as a monosyllable.

154. Genius, guardian spirit: see Arcades and Comus regarding the duties of such spirits.

155. due feet, my feet that are due at the places of worship and learning. Due, duty, and debt are all from the Lat. debitus, owed; the last directly, the others through French.

156. To walk is here a transitive verb=to frequent, to traverse.

studious cloister's pale; the precincts or enclosure of some building devoted to learning and (as the next line shows) to religious services. 'Cloister' is a covered arcade forming part of a church or college: Milton may have been thinking of his life at Cambridge, though the details of the description do not apply to any particular building. The radical sense of the word is a closed-in place (Lat. clausus, shut).

'Pale' is a noun=enclosure; etymologically, a place shut in by pales or wooden stakes; hence our words paling, impale, and palisade. We still speak of the pale of the Church, the English pale in Ireland, the pale of a subject, etc.

157. love the high-embow'd roof. The poet here passes from the cloister to the inside of some church: (it may be the college-chapel that is in Milton's thoughts, or even St. Paul's Cathedral or Westminster Abbey). 'High-embow'd,' i.e. arched or vaulted, as in the Gothic style of architecture, which Milton, with all his Puritanism, never ceased to love. "Observe that only at this point of the poem is Penseroso in contact with his fellow-creatures. Throughout the rest he is solitary" (Masson).

The grammatical construction is peculiar: we cannot say, 'let my due feet never fail to love'; it is better therefore to read, 'let (me) love,' etc., me being implied in 'my feet.' See note on L'Alleg. 122.

158. antique: see L'Alleg. 128, note.

massy proof: proof against the great weight of the stone roof, because they are massive. Shakespeare and Milton use 'proof' in the sense of 'strong,' and 'massy' is an older form of the adjective than 'massive,' occurring in Spenser and Shakespeare as well as here. Similar examples are 'adamantean proof' applied to a coat of mail, not because it is proof against adamant, but because, being made of adamant, it is proof against assailants (Sams. Agon. 134); also virtue-proof=strong against temptation, because virtuous (Par. Lost, v. 384). The introduction of a hyphen ('massy-proof'), which does not occur in the first and second editions, has caused some editors to interpret the words as 'proof against the mass they bear': in those cases, however, in which that against which the object is proof is mentioned, the first part of the compound is a noun, e.g. star-proof, shame-proof, sunbeam-proof (Arc. 88). The first interpretation is therefore more probably correct.

159. storied windows, windows of stained glass with stories from Scripture history represented on them. 'Story' is an abbreviated form of 'history,' the latter being directly from Lat. historia, the other through the French. It has no connection with 'story' (= part of a house), which means something built (comp. store).

159. light: see L'Alleg. 62, note.

160. religious light, such a light as is suited to a place of worship, and tending to prevent one's thoughts from being distracted. 'Religious,' like 'studious' (line 156), is a transferred epithet.

161. pealing organ, loud-sounding organ. Milton has several references to the organ (comp. Par. Lost, i. 708, xi. 560)—an instrument upon which he could himself play. 'Blow,' used in a semi-passive sense, and applied to wind-instruments (such as the organ). Line 163 depends on 'blow,' giving the circumstances of the action.

162. quire, band of singers or choristers. 'Quire' is another spelling of 'choir' (Lat. chorus, a band of singers, Greek choros, a band of singers and dancers). A 'choir' is now a body of trained singers who lead the voices of a congregation: the name is also applied to the part of the church in which they are seated. The 'quire below' here means 'the choir below the organ-gallery.' 'Quire,' denoting a collection of sheets of paper, is an entirely different word, being cognate with the French cahier, a small book (or, more probably, with the Lat. quatuor, four). See note, Epitaph on M. of W. 17.

163. anthems, sacred music. 'Anthem' is a contraction of the A.S. antefn, which is corrupted from the Lat. antiphona (Greek anti, in return, and phónē, the voice); it is therefore radically the same as the English word antiphon, which denotes music sung by choristers alternately, one half of the choir responding to the other.

clear, may mean 'clearly sung,' or (as in Lyc. 70) 'pure' or 'noble.'

164. As, relative pronoun, the antecedent 'such' being omitted, as is usual in Chaucer and other old writers.

165, 166. Dissolve me into ecstasies. The meaning of these beautiful lines cannot be adequately expressed in prose. The poet desires to hear music that will so melt his soul, so carry him out of himself, that he may almost learn the secrets of divine things. With 'dissolve' comp. 'melting voice' (L'Alleg. 142), and with 'ecstasies' comp. 'rapt soul' (line 40, note).

'Ecstasy' is the Greek ekstasis, standing or being taken out of one's self, as in a trance. It came afterwards to denote madness, as we say of madmen that they are 'beside themselves'; but its present meaning is enthusiasm or very strong feeling.

168. peaceful hermitage. This is a fitting conclusion to the life of Il Penseroso, thus alluded to by Scott (Marmion, ii.)—

“Here have I thought ’twere sweet to dwell,
And rear again the chaplain’s cell,
Like that same peaceful hermitage,
Where Milton long’d to spend his age.”

In old romances there is constant mention of hermits, men who had retired from society and were supposed to devote their lives to philosophic thought or religious contemplation. Burton, in Anat. of Mel., says: “Voluntary solitariness is that which is familiar with melancholy.” ‘Hermitage’: in this word the suffix -age denotes place, as in ‘parsonage’; ‘her-mit,’ formerly written ‘eremite,’ is derived, through French and Latin, from Greek erēmos, solitary, desert.

In line 167 we have an example of the jussive subjunctive, i.e. the subjunctive expressing a wish or desire, ‘And may .. find,’ etc.: this corresponds to a Latin subjunctive introduced by quod or quod utinam.

169. hairy gown, garment of coarse shaggy cloth. In the English Bible we read of raiment of camel’s hair worn by Elijah and John the Baptist. ‘Gown’ and ‘cell’ are objects of the verb ‘find.’

170. spell, study carefully. We talk of ‘spelling out’ the meaning of a difficult passage, as a child names the letters of a word, giving each its proper power. In the same way the poet would learn the nature and powers of the stars and herbs (comp. Son. xvii. 6): A.S. spel, a story, as in gospel. Milton refers to this knowledge of the virtues of herbs in Com. 620-640, and Epit. Damon, 150-154.

171. Of, concerning. In this line ‘shew’ rhymes with ‘dew’: this points to the fact that, though the pronunciation show was familiar, it was not universal; the word is to be pronounced here like shoe: comp. Son. ii., where ‘sheweth’ rhymes with ‘youth.’

173. There may be a reference here to the old astrologers who claimed the power of predicting events from the study of the stars, but such a power was not the ambition of Milton: he rather means that wise experience of the aged, which enables them, through their knowledge of the past, to judge the probable results of different lines of action.

174. strain, utterance: we speak of a cheerful or a sad strain of speech or music, probably with a metaphorical allusion to the notes of a stringed instrument: ‘strain’ is literally something stretched; comp. note, Nat. Ode, 17.

175. These pleasures, etc.; comp. note on L'Alleg. 151. It will be noticed that the conditional nature of Milton's acceptance of Melancholy is not so distinctly expressed as that of Mirth.

ARCADES.

The sub-title of this piece fully explains the occasion of its production. Arcades, or "The Arcadians," was a masque of which only the words contributed by Milton have come down to us. It was probably written in 1632 or 1633, before the production of Comus, which was composed for another member of the same family in 1634.

The lady before whom Arcades was 'presented,' i.e. represented, was Alice Spencer, Countess-Dowager of Derby, then, over seventy years of age. She is the 'rural queen' of the entertainment. She had been married, when young, to Lord Strange, afterwards fifth Earl of Derby. It was to her that the poet Spenser dedicated his Tears of the Muses in 1591, and after her husband's death in 1594 he referred to her as Amaryllis in Colin Clout's come Home again (1595). She was now Countess-Dowager of Derby, a title she retained until her death. In 1600 she married Sir Thomas Egerton, who was afterwards Lord Chancellor and Viscount Brackley. Next year she and her husband purchased the estate of Harefield in Middlesex, and here they mainly resided. Viscount Brackley died in 1616-17, and his widow survived him for twenty years. She was often visited by her grandchildren, and on some occasion when they wished to entertain her with a masque—then a fashionable form of entertainment—they applied to Henry Lawes, one of the King's private musicians, to manage it for them. He applied to his friend Milton for the words, and these we now have in the form of three short songs and eighty-three lines of blank verse. This was Milton's first attempt at masque-writing.

1. Look nymphs, and shepherds. The scene opens with a group of young men and women moving towards the seat occupied by the Countess-Dowager of Derby. As they advance one of the company addresses his companions in song.

3. from hence: see note, L'Alleg. 1. 'Hence' means 'from this place,' so that in the phrase 'from hence' the force of the preposition is twice introduced. Such idioms arise from forgetfulness of the origin of words.

descry, make out, discover by the eye. 'Descry' is radically the same as 'describe': both are from Lat. describere, to write fully, to trace out; the one directly, the other through French. Comp. such pairs of words as secure and sure; fact and feat;

pauper and poor; tradition and treason; potent and puissant (l. 60).

Too divine to be mistook. Comp. Jonson's Alchemist, iv. 1—

“A certain touch or air,
That sparkles a divinity, beyond
An earthly beauty.”

Mistook: a form of the past tense used as a past participle: comp. l. 47, and see note, On Shakespeare, 12.

5. This, this is she. Comp. the Fairies' song in The Satyr, in reference to the queen of James I.—

“This is she, this is she
In whose world of grace
Every season, person, place,
That receive her happy be.”

The whole of the first song in Arcades shows that Milton must have read some of Jonson's masques with care.

6. vows, desires: comp. Lyc. 159. The Latin rotum means (1) a solemn promise, (2) a wish or desire. See note, Son. ix. 8.

bend, are directed.

7. solemn, devout. The word is from Lat. sollus, complete; and annus, a year; hence its primary sense is ‘recurring at the end of a completed year.’ Hence it came to mean ‘usual,’ and (as religious festivals recur at stated periods) ‘religious’; finally, it was applied to anything that was not to be lightly or hastily undertaken, i.e. serious or grave.

8. Fame: object of the verb ‘may accuse.’

to raise: an infinitive of purpose. See Lyc. 70, where Fame is used with the verb raise, as here.

9. erst, formerly, at first. This is the superlative of Old English er (ere): see note, L'Alleg. 107.

lavish and profuse. These words have radically the same sense: ‘lavish’ is from an obsolete verb ‘lave,’ to pour out; and ‘profuse’ is from Lat. profundere, to pour out.

12. Less than half. Comp. the words of the Queen of Sheba regarding Solomon: “Behold the one half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me,” 2 Chron. ix. 5.

13. Envy bid conceal the rest, i.e. Envy commanded the rest to be concealed. Comp. Thomson's Seasons—

“Base envy withers at another's joy,
And hates that excellence it cannot reach.”

‘Bid’ is the past tense, a form which has arisen out of the past participle ‘bidden’: the past in ordinary use is ‘bade.’ This is one of those verbs after which the simple infinitive (without to) is used : comp. Son. viii. 10, xiv. 13. Such omission of to now occurs with so few verbs that to is often called the sign of the infinitive ; but in early English the only sign of the infinitive was the termination en (e.g. speken, to speak ; he can speken). The infinitive, being used as a noun, had a dative form called the gerund which was preceded by to ; and confusion between this gerundial infinitive and the simple infinitive led to the general use of to. Cf. note, Son. xx. 4.

14. radiant, sending forth rays or beams of light. Radiis and ray are radically the same word.

state : comp. l. 81. "In the phraseology of this stanza there is perhaps a reference to the actual surroundings of the Countess in the masque—devices of bright light, silver rays seeming to shoot from her throne" (Masson). If so, 'state' may here mean the canopy over the throne, or its adornments. Comp. Jonson's Hymenææ, where Juno is represented as seated on a throne—

" And see where Juno . . .
Displays her glittering state and chair,
As she enlightened all the air ! "

20. Might she, etc, she might well be.

the wise Latona. Latona was the wife of Jupiter before Juno, and mother of Apollo and Diana (see Son. xii.). She was generally worshipped as a goddess in conjunction with her children, and this may explain why Milton introduces her name here.

21. towered Cybelé. Cybele is here referred to as the mother of the gods in order to compliment the Countess on her distinguished family. In works of art she is usually represented as seated on a throne, adorned with a mural crown to signify that she first taught men the art of fortifying cities : hence the epithet 'towered.' In Elegy v. Milton speaks of her as the goddess of fertility and crowned with a tower of pines. Ovid calls her turrita mater, and Spenser writes—

" Old Cybele, arrayed with pompous pride,
Wearing a diadem embattled wide
With hundred turrets, like a turban." F.Q. iv.

She was the wife of Saturn and mother of Jupiter, Juno, Neptune, Pluto, Vesta and Ceres.

23. Juno dares ... odds, i.e. Juno, in a contest of beauty, would not venture to compete with her on equal terms. This implies another compliment to the Countess.

24. Who had thought : who would have thought (that) etc. Comp.—

"O had his powerful destiny ordained
 Me some inferior angel, I had stood
 Then happy : " (i.e. I would have stood).

24. clime, region : see note, Son. viii. 8.

25. so unparalleled. Strictly, unparalleled cannot have its meaning modified by an adverb of degree : it is here used, however, merely to denote a high degree of excellence or beauty. Comp. chiefest, Il Pens. 51, note.

The student should note the art with which the arrangement of rhymes is varied in the different stanzas of this song. Moreover, if we allow for vowel-lengthening in song and recitation, and for Elizabethan pronunciation, we find that Milton has avoided imperfect rhymes ; see lines 2, 9, 30, 38, 42, 62, 68.

26. The Genius of the Wood now speaks. The introduction of a genius or guardian spirit is a common device in Jonson's masques : this form of composition depends more largely upon supernatural agency than the ordinary drama. When Arcades was first performed Henry Lawes probably acted the part of the Genius (see Son. xiii.) : he first addresses the gentlemen, then the ladies of the masque (l. 32).

gentle, well-born, noble. This is the original sense of the word : in Scott we find the word 'gentle' used to denote persons of rank, a usage still common in Scotland. The genius here explains why he called the performers 'gentle' : "I call you gentle because, in spite of your disguise, I see," etc. Lines 26-31 refer to the male performers.

27. I see bright honour, etc. Comp.

"Yet well I know you come of royal race,
 I see such sparks of honour in your face."

Hist. of King Leir.

The object of 'see' is complex, consisting of a substantive ('honour') and an infinitive ('sparkle').

28. Arcady, Arcadia. For the form of the word comp. Araby for Arabia, Italy for Italia, family for familia, etc., in all of which y represents Lat. ia.

Arcadia was a country in Peloponnesus (peninsular Greece) of which the inhabitants were chiefly engaged in pastoral pursuits ; they were simple in their manners, and retained their primitive habits long after the rest of Greece. Hence writers of pastoral poetry often laid the scene of their poems in Arcadia, and the characters in pastoral dramas were represented as Arcadians (Lat. Arcades), and described as 'swains' or 'shepherds.' Sir Philip Sidney wrote a pastoral romance called Arcadia (1590). The phrase 'Arcadian simplicity' has passed into a proverb.

29. flood ; often used in poetry for 'river.

sung, celebrated in poetry, e.g. by Virgil. See also Shelley's Arethusa for a subsequent reference to this 'flood.'

30. Alpheus, pronounced Al-phé-us. A river-god who pursued the nymph Arethusa ; she was changed by Diana into the fountain of Arethusa in the island of Ortygia at Syracuse, but the god continued to pursue her under the sea, and attempted to mingle his stream with the Ortygian fountain. This story arises from the fact that the Alpheus, a river which rises in Arcadia, flows for some distance underground before falling into the Ionian Sea. The Arcadians believed that an object thrown into the Alpheus would reappear in the fountain of Arethusa. See Lyc. 85, 132.

sluice, passage, flood-gate. A 'sluice' is literally something that excludes (Lat. excludere, to shut off).

31. Stole. From this verb comes 'stealth' : see Com. 503.

Arethuse : see note, l. 30 above.

32. breathing roses : here applied to the lady performers, so that 'breathing' may mean simply 'animated.' But Milton so often uses the word 'breathe' in cases where fragrance or sweetness is signified, that it may here be interpreted in this sense.

33. silver-buskined. Diana and her wood-nymphs wore light boots reaching to the calf of the leg ; such boots were therefore different from the buskins worn by tragic actors ; see Il Pens. 102.

34. intent, purpose, that towards which the mind is stretched (Lat. intendere, to stretch out). See note, Son. xii a. 9. For the use of 'free' comp. note, L'Alleg. 11.

35. Was ... meant. The subject of this verb consists of two nouns, quest and intent, which together express one idea : the verb is therefore singular. Comp. Lyc. 7.

all, entirely : an adverb of degree modifying 'meant.'

36. yon, that in the distance. In the oldest English yond was a preposition=beyond, or an adverb=yonder. In Il Pens. 52 yon is an adverb, here it is an adjective. Shakespeare uses yond as an adverb and an adjective.

shrine, place sacred to a divinity.

37. low reverence, humble reverence.

38. comply, aid. It is radically the same as complete : 'to comply' is 'to complete' or fulfil. It has no connection with ply or pliant, as is often supposed.

39. glad solemnity. This looks like a verbal contradiction, but see note on l. 7 : a solemnity is merely a serious or important duty or function. Thus we speak of solemnising a marriage.

40. lead ye, i.e. (I will) lead you. In this line ye occurs twice, once as nominative, once as object. In line 101 it is used as a dative (= to you). "This confusion between ye and you did not exist in old English : ye was always used as a nominative, and you as a dative or accusative. In the English Bible the distinction is very carefully observed, but in the dramatists of the Elizabethan period there is a very loose use of the two forms" (Morris) : it is the same in Milton. It is to be noticed that ye can be pronounced more rapidly than you, and is therefore generally used when an unaccented syllable is wanted (as in the above passage) : see l. 81.

41. This line is the grammatical object of the verb 'may behold.'

shallow-searching : comp. l. 12 and Lyc. 70. Nothing distinguishes Milton from other writers so much as the force of his epithets ; the liberty with which he forms compounds, whether hybrid or not, is also remarkable. See Il Pens. 66, note.

42. Which : the antecedent is expressed by l. 41.

full oft : 'full,' an adverb of degree, modifying 'oft.' 'Alone' is an adjective qualifying 'I.'

43. sat : the past tense of sit takes either of the forms sat and sate ; the former is more common.

44. by lot from Jove, i.e. by Jupiter's allotment.

the Power, i.e. the guardian spirit, genius loci. Each spot, according to Roman mythology, had a spirit of its own, and Varro says that in Latium there were as many gods as trees.

45. oaken bower : see note, Lyc. 33, on oaten.

46. curl the grove : applied to the foliage of the trees, as in the following passage from Sylvester's Du Bartas—

"When through their green boughs whistling winds do whirl,
With wanton puffs, their waving locks to curl."

The expression is a common one in the poetry of the time (see Todd). It here means 'to adorn.'

47. With ringlets, etc. Observe the alliteration of this line : five words in it contain the w sound. 'Wove' = woven ; "intertwined with quaint ringlets and wanton windings." There are two forms of the participle, wove and woven ; comp. trod and trodden (L'Alleg. 131).

quaint, neat, dainty. In modern English it means 'odd' or old-fashioned. The word is from Lat. cognitus, 'known' or remarkable ; and Chaucer uses it in the sense of 'famous.' In French it became coint, which was treated as if from Lat. comptus, neat, ingenious. This explains how the word obtained the meaning Milton gives it. Its present meaning is due to the fact that what is in one age designed with too great attention to art is liable, in a later age, to seem whimsical and odd. See note on Nat. Ode, 194.

48. nightly, nocturnal, pertaining to night: comp. Il Pens. 83. Nightly is here an adjective, though its force is that of an adverb = at night: comp. Wordsworth—

“The nightly hunter lifting up his eyes”

= The hunter lifting up his eyes at night. The usual sense of the word is ‘from night to night.’ The two uses are due to the fact that ly is both an adjectival and an adverbial suffix.

49. noisome, injurious. The word is noi-some, which is a contraction of annoy-some: ‘some’ is the adjectival suffix. The word has therefore no connection with noise or noxious.

blasting vapours chill: comp. Com. 269, 845, where the Genius performs similar duties. Burton, in Anat. of Mel., speaks of spirits that “hurt and infect men and beasts, vines, corn, cattle, plants,” etc.

50. brush off the evil dew: comp. Tempest, i. 4—

“As wicked dew as e’er my mother brushed,
With raven’s feather, from unwholesome fen.”

51. Another alliterative line, showing the same arrangement of adjectives as line 49: see note, L’Alleg. 40.

thwarting thunder. ‘Thunder’ is here used for ‘lightning,’ Lat. fulmen; this explains the epithets ‘blue’ and ‘thwarting’ (shooting obliquely through the sky). Thwart was originally an adverb; then it was used as an adjective, and finally as a verb (to cross), as in the phrase “As a shooting star in autumn thwarts the night” (Par. Lost, iv. 557). Hence the later sense, to harm or frustrate (to cross a wish).

52. cross, adverse, unfavourable: see L’Alleg. 122, note.

dire-looking planet strikes. ‘Dire-looking’ = of evil aspect; comp. Lyc. 138. The planet referred to is Saturn, which in astrology and chiromancy was an unlucky star. For the use of ‘strike’ comp. Hamlet—

“The nights are wholesome; then no planets strike,
No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to harm.”

53. worm ... venom, the canker-worm. ‘Canker’ is radically the same as cancer, an eating or spreading sore: comp. ‘taint-worm,’ Lyc. 46.

54. fetch my round, go my round. The verb has this sense as it is cognate with foot: compare “From thence fetching a compass (i.e. making a detour) we came to Rhegium," Acts, xxviii. 13.

56. early: an adverb modifying 'haste,' l. 58.

ere, see note, L'Alleg. 107.

odorous breath of morn, fragrant morning breezes. Compare Gray's Elegy: "the breezy call of incense-breathing morn."

57. tasselled horn, i.e. huntsman's horn which had tassels hung to it: comp. L'Alleg. 53-56.

58. high thicket, i.e. thicket on the hill-side.

all about: all modifies about, which again modifies haste.

59. ranks, rows of trees and plants.

60. puissant, potent, powerful (in preventing the effects of the evil dew,' etc.). See note on 'descry,' line 3, for explanation of the relation between potent and puissant. Comp. The Alchemist, iv. 1—

"I will be puissant, and mighty in my talk to her."

murmurs made to bless, in opposition to the incantations or spells of evil spirits which were either sung or murmured over the doomed object: comp. Comus 525:

"By sly enticement gives his baneful cup,
With many murmurs mixed."

61. But else, i.e. when not thus employed.

deep of night: comp. the phrase 'dead of night.'

62. mortal sense, i.e. the senses of human beings. The meaning is, 'When all human beings are asleep, I listen,' etc. See Lyc. 78, note.

63. celestial Sirens' harmony, etc. In these lines Milton refers (1) to the Pythagorean doctrine of the music of the spheres; (2) to that system of astronomy developed by Eudoxus, Plato, Aristotle, Hipparchus, Ptolemy, and others, which is usually called the Ptolemaic system; and (3) to Plato's theory of the relation of the Fates or "daughters of Necessity" to that system.

(1) Pythagoras (B.C. 580), having remarked that the pitch of notes depends on the rate of vibration, and also that the planets move with different velocities, was led to extend the same relation to the planets and to suppose that they emit sounds proportional to their respective distances from the Earth, thus forming a celestial concert too melodious to affect the gross ears of mankind. This is what is meant by the music or harmony of the spheres. Plato supposes this harmony to be produced by Sirens.

(2) According to the Ptolemaic system of astronomy the Earth was the centre of our universe, and the apparent motions of the other heavenly bodies were due to the fact that they were fixed in transparent spheres enclosing the central Earth at different distances. Plato recognised only eight of such spheres, the outermost being that of the Fixed Stars. Later, two more spheres were added—the crystalline sphere outside of that of the fixed stars, and, beyond all, the Tenth Sphere, called the Primum Mobile or ‘first moved,’ which contained all the others. In the above passage Milton speaks of the music of the spheres as being produced by the nine Muses that sit upon the nine inner spheres.

(3) Milton seems to have had in view a passage in Plato’s Republic (bk. x.). Fate or Necessity has on her knees a spindle of adamant, and the turning of this spindle directs the motions of the heavenly bodies. “The spindle turns on the knees of Necessity; and on the upper surface of each circle is a siren who goes round with it, hymning a single sound and note. The eight together form one harmony, and round about at equal intervals there is another band, three in number, each sitting upon her throne: these are the Fates, daughters of Necessity, who are clothed in white raiment and have crowns of wool upon their heads, Lachesis and Clotho and Atropos, who accompany with their voices the harmony of the sirens.” In Hesiod the three Fates are thus distinguished: Clotho spins the thread of human life; Lachesis guides it and thus assigns his fate to every man; and Atropos is the fate that cannot be avoided. The last is usually represented with some cutting instrument.

65. vital shears: the shears held by Atropos, who cuts the thread of life. Comp. Lyc. 75, where they are called “abhorred shears”: see also Epitaph on M. of W. 28.

66. adamantine spindle. ‘Adamantine’ is from the Greek, and means ‘that which is unconquerable.’ The word ‘diamond’ is cognate. Milton signifies thus that resistance to the course of Fate is useless. ‘Spindle,’ the pin or stick from which a thread is spun.

68. sweet compulsion. There is a kind of verbal contradiction or oxymoron in these words which renders them very striking: comp. Son. xxiii. 14; Par. Lost, ix. 47; also l. 39 above.

69. daughters of Necessity: see notes above, l. 63.

70. unsteady Nature, i.e. Nature that would otherwise be unsteady or not subject to law. ‘Unsteady’ does not occur elsewhere in Milton’s poems.

71. low world, the mundane or terrestrial world; in Comus it is “this dim spot which men call Earth.” It may be noted here that ‘mundane’ means literally ‘ordered’ or subject to law.

measured motion: comp. Jonson:—

“Nature is Motion’s mother, as she’s yours.
The spring whence order flows, that all directs,
And knits the causes with the effects.”

Mercury Vindicated.

72. After the heavenly tune, i.e. in accordance with the music of the spheres. Cf. At a Solemn Music, notes.

which none can hear: the construction is, 'which none of human mould can hear.' This is an idea which occurs repeatedly in Milton's prose and poetry—that the music of the spheres might possibly be audible to human beings if they lived pure and spiritual lives. The Genius of the wood could hear it because he was a good spirit.

73. mould, shape or form.

with gross unpurged ear: comp. Comus, 458, 997; also Mid. N. D. iii. 1—

"And I will purge thy grossness so,
That thou wilt like an airy spirit go."

'Gross' = dense or coarse; 'unpurged' = impure. See also Mer. of Ven. v. 1, and Nat. Ode, 125-132.

74. blaze: a favourite word of Milton's with reference to a person's fame or 'praise'; see Lyc. 74.

75. her immortal praise Whose, i.e. the immortal praise of her whose: see note, L'Alleg. 124.

76. for her most fit, i.e. (such music were) most suitable for her to hear: comp. befits, l. 92.

77. hit, produce. Contrast its sense in Il Pens. 14.

79. lesser, inferior: a double comparative. See note, Il Pens. 51.

80. assay, attempt, try. In this general sense we now use essay, which is radically the same word. Assay is now used chiefly of the trial or testing of metals.

81. And so attend ye, i.e. 'and thus I will escort you towards her glittering seat of state.' See note on l. 40.

state: see note on l. 14.

82. all, that are of noble stem. This does not mean, 'all of you that are of noble stem': the words may be rearranged thus, 'Where ye, that are all of noble stem, may approach,' etc. 'Stem' = family; by a similar figure of speech we speak of 'the branches of a family,' 'a family-tree,' etc.

83. This line is often referred to as harsh, owing to the number of sibilants introduced. This is here mentioned in order that the student may observe how few such lines are in Milton's poetry.

84. enamelled, bright. This is the radical sense of the word, and that in which Milton uses it. As enamelling is generally in colours the word has acquired a secondary sense, 'variegated.' 'Enamel' is literally a 'molten-like or glass-like coating': it is cognate with melt. See Lyc. 139, and note.

85. print of step, foot-print. Comp. Com. 897, 'printless feet.'

87. warbled string. 'Warbled' may be taken either in an active sense (= warbling), or in a passive sense (= made to warble or trill). The participle would, in the latter case, be used proleptically, denoting the result of the action implied in the verb 'touch.' Comp. Com. 854: "warbled song."

89. branching, wide-spreading: see note on L'Alleg. 58.

star-proof, with foliage so dense that no light can penetrate. Comp. Par. Lost, ix. 1086, "where highest woods impenetrable to star or sunlight," etc.: also Shelley's Cloud, "Sunbeam-proof, I hang like a roof." For Milton's use of 'proof' see note, Il Pens. 158. It has been objected that the elm is not 'star-proof,' its foliage being far from close. The references to the elm and the idea implied in 'star-proof' are both so common in Milton that he may, by a poetical privilege, have brought the two ideas together without recalling the actual appearance of the tree.

91. bring you where, i.e. 'bring you (to the place) where.'

93. delty: comp. lines 4, 25.

94. Such a rural Queen, etc.: no such queen has ever ruled in Arcadia. 'Rural' is here used in its strict sense = of the country (Lat. rus, the country as opposed to the town).

96. That part of the entertainment which intervened between the second song (sung by the Genius) and the third song (sung by the company) is lost to us. The final words of both songs are the same, as if implying that the promise made by the spirit had been fulfilled to the satisfaction of all.

97. sandy Ladon's lilled banks. Ladon was a river of Arcadia, and the epithet 'sandy' has been applied to it both by Latin and English writers. Ovid speaks of the Ladon and the Tiber as sandy (arenosus), as Browne and Sidney do of the former.

'Lilled,' overgrown with lilies: adjectives in ed are formed from nouns in two ways; (1) when the noun (as here) has a verbal signification, the participle being used as an adjective; (2) where there is no verbal significance, the suffix being added to the noun, e.g. ragged, wretched, left-handed, etc.

98. old Lycæus: a lofty mountain in Arcadia, and one of the chief seats of the worship of Zeus. Pan, the chief seat of whose worship was in Arcadia, had a temple on this mountain. Hence both Pan and Zeus are surnamed Lycaeus.

Cyllene hoar: the highest mountain in Peloponnesus, on the borders of Arcadia; it was sacred to Mercury. The word is here a dissyllable; in Greek it is a trisyllable.

99. Trip, dance : comp. L'Alleg. 33.

twilight ranks. 'Twilight' is here used as an adjective (A.S. twi, double) : the word strictly denotes 'double light,' but it is used rather in the sense of 'half light.' Comp. Il Pens. 133.

100. Though Erymanth. Erymanthus, a tributary of the river Alpheus (see l. 30) : the mountain in which it rose was of the same name, but it is so usual in poetry to speak of streams as weeping that we may suppose the river to be referred to here.

Grammatically the line is a concessive clause, and the verb is in the subjunctive because it refers to the future ; see 'shall give,' next line.

101. give ye thanks : the meaning is, 'A more fertile soil will reward you for your coming, by pasturing your flocks.' For the use of 'ye' see note, l. 40.

102. Mænalus, a mountain of Arcadia, so celebrated that in Roman poetry the adjective Maenalis is often used as equivalent to Arcadian. Pan, whose favourite abode it was, is called "the Maenalian god."

104. grace. The word may be used here with something of the sense of Lat. gratiam habere, to be grateful : "it will be a more thankful task to serve the queen of this place than to continue to dwell in Arcadia."

106. Syrinx : an Arcadian nymph, who, being pursued by Pan, fled into the river Ladon, and at her own request was changed into a reed, of which Pan then made his flute (or syrinx). Milton implies that even Syrinx might serve this "rural Queen,"—a great compliment to the Countess of Derby, seeing that Jonson in The Satyr had likened Queen Anne to Syrinx, and that Spenser had addressed Queen Elizabeth as the daughter of Syrinx. Jonson's masque had been "presented" by the father of the Countess, so that she may possibly have seen it.

Pan's mistress. Pan was the god of flocks and shepherds among the Greeks : as the god of every thing connected with pastoral life he was fond of music, and the inventor of the shepherd's flute. He was dreaded by travellers to whom he appeared, startling them with sudden terror. Hence extreme fright was ascribed to Pan, and called a Panic fear ; this is the origin of the word panic.

were, should be : subjunctive mood.

107. her, i.e. the Countess.

LYCIDAS

This poem was written in November, 1637, and appeared in a volume of memorial verses published at Cambridge in 1638 as a tribute to Mr. Edward King. King, a son of Sir John King, Secretary for Ireland, had been admitted to Christ's College, Cambridge in 1626, so that he was a fellow-student of Milton's. He was made a Fellow in 1630, and seems to have become extremely popular. He was a young man of 'hopeful parts,' and had shown some skill in poetical composition. In 1633 he took his degree of M.A., and remained at Cambridge to study for the Church. In the vacation of 1637 he sailed from Chester on a visit to his friends in Ireland: the ship was wrecked off the Welsh coast and King went down with it. His death was much lamented by his college friends and they got together a collection of tributary verses to which Milton contributed Lycidas.

Lycidas is a pastoral elegy, i.e. the poet speaks as a shepherd bewailing the loss of a fellow-shepherd. The subjoined analysis will guide the student in reading it. We do not look in the poem for the keen sense of personal loss that we find in Tennyson's In Memoriam or in Milton's own Epitaphium Damonis, nor for the sustained scorn that animates Shelley's Adonais; but in its tender regret for a dead friend, in its sweet "touches of idealised rural life," in its glimpses of a suppressed passion that was soon to break forth, and in its mingling of a truly religious spirit with all its classical imagery, it reveals to us the greatness of the poetical genius of Milton. It "marks the point of transition from the early Milton, the Milton of mask, pastoral, and idyll, to the quite other Milton, who, after twenty years of hot party struggle, returned to poetry in another vein, never to the 'woods and pastures' of which he took a final leave in Lycidas." (Pattison.)

NOTES.

Monody : an ode in which a single mourner bewails (Greek monos, single : ōdē, a song or ode). Lycidas is a typical example of the Elegy, with much of the intense feeling peculiar to the less sustained Ode proper ; but its form is that of the Pastoral, and its varied metrical structure is totally unlike that of the modern elegiac stanza.

height : so spelt in both the editions published in Milton's lifetime, though his usual spelling is 'highth.'

1. Yet once more. These words have reference to the fact that Milton had written no English verse for three years, and that he did not yet consider himself sufficiently matured for the poet's task. The words do not imply that he is once more to write an elegiac poem, as if he were referring back to his poems, On the death of a Fair Infant and Epitaph on the Marchioness of Winchester : he is thinking of Comus (written in 1634).

laurels, etc. Laurels, myrtles and ivy are here addressed because they are, in classical poetry, associated with the Muses, and not because the poet thinks them to be specially suggestive of mourning. The laurel has been associated with poetry since the time of the Greeks, who believed that it communicated the poetic spirit : the Romans regarded it as sacred to Apollo. Comp. Son. xvi. 9.

2. myrtles brown. 'Brown' is a classical epithet of the myrtle ; in one of his Odes Horace contrasts the brown myrtle with the evergreen ivy. It was sacred to Venus, and at Greek banquets each singer held a myrtle bough.

ivy never sere, evergreen ivy : it was sacred to Bacchus, and in Virgil we read of the laurel of victory being twined with the ivy. Horace also speaks of ivy as being used to deck the brows of the learned : in Christian art it is the symbol of everlasting life.

'Sere' = dry, withered ; the same word as sear (A.S. seárian, to dry up), and cognate with the verb 'to sear,' i.e. to burn up.

3. I come, etc. "I come to make a poet's garland for myself," i.e. to write a poem.

harsh and crude, bitter and unripe, because plucked before their due time ! this refers to the poet's own unripeness, not to that of Lycidas. Milton's 'mellowing year' had not yet come ; his opinion was that poetry was a "work not to be raised from the heat of youth . . . but by devout prayer to that eternal Spirit who can enrich with all utterance and knowledge." 'Crude' is literally 'raw' ; hence 'unprepared,' as 'crude salt' ; and hence 'undeveloped,' e.g. —

"Deep versed in books, and shallow in himself, Crude, or intoxicate, collecting toys."

Par. Reg. iv.

'Cruel' (Lat. crudelis) is from the same root.

4. forced fingers rude. On the order of the words compare note on L'Alleg. 40. 'Forced' = unwilling, not because the poet was unwilling to mourn his friend's loss, but unwilling yet to turn again to poetry. 'Rude' : comp. Il Pens. 136.

5. Shatter your leaves. 'Shatter' is a doublet of scatter, and here (as in Par. Lost, x. 1063) the former is used where we should now use the latter. 'Shatter' suggests the employment of force, and therefore agrees with the sense of the preceding line.

mellowing year : time of maturity. 'Mellow' has here an active sense, i.e. 'making mellow.' The word originally means 'soft' like ripe fruit, and hence its present use : it is cognate with melt and mild. Warton objects to the phrase here used as inaccurate, because the leaves of the laurel, myrtle, and ivy are not affected by the mellowing year : the poet, however, is thinking of the berries, which symbolise the poetical fruit he was himself to produce.

6. sad occasion dear : see note on l. 4. The original sense of 'dear' is 'precious' (A.S. deore), and hence its present meanings in English, viz. 'costly' and 'beloved.' But it is used by Spenser, Shakespeare, and Milton in an entirely different sense : comp. 'my dearest foe,' 'hated his father dearly,' 'dear peril,' etc. Some would say that 'dear' is here a corruption of dire, but this is a mere assumption, though the sense is similar. Craik suggests "that the notion properly involved in it of love, having first become generalised into that of a strong affection of any kind, had thence passed on to that of such an emotion the very reverse of love." The fact seems to be that 'dear' as 'precious' came to denote close relation, and hence was applied generally to whatever intimately concerned a person.

7. Compels : the verb is singular, though there are two nominatives, for both together convey the one idea that, but for the occasion of Lycidas' death, the poet would not have been constrained to write.

to disturb your season due : to pluck you before your proper season. On 'due' see Il Pens. 155. 'Season' is often used to denote 'the usual or proper time'; e.g. we speak of fruit as being 'in season,' when it is fit for use, and the adjective 'seasonable' = occurring in good time : comp. Son. ii. 7.

8. ere his prime : see note on L'Alleg. 107. 'Prime' here denotes 'the best part of life' : contrast its meaning in Son. ix. 1.

9. peer, equal (Lat. par) : see Arc. 75.

10. Who would not sing, etc. : a rhetorical question, equivalent to 'No one could refuse to sing,' etc. : comp. 'Neque quis carmina Gallo?' Virgil, Ecl. x. 3. The name Lycidas occurs in the pastorals of Theocritus and in Virgil's ninth Eclogue.

knew Himself to sing, was himself able to sing, i.e. was a poet. Comp. Horace's phrase, "Reddere qui voces jam scit puer."

11. build the lofty rhyme : comp. the Lat. phrase "condere carmen," to build up a song (Hor. Epis. i. 3). 'Build' has reference to the regular structure of the verse : it may also allude to the fact that King had written several short poetical pieces in Latin. 'Rhyme' is here used for 'verse'; the original spelling was 'rime,' and 'rhyme' does not occur in English before 1550 : there is now a tendency to revert to the older and more correct spelling. The A.S. rim meant 'number,' and rimcraft, arithmetic; then the word was applied in a secondary sense to verse having regularity in the number of its syllables and accents, and finally to verse having final syllables of like sound. The change of i to y, and the insertion of h is due to confusion with the Greek word rhythmos, measured motion. Shakespeare has 'rime'; and Milton in his prefatory remarks on the verse of Par. Lost uses the spelling 'rime,' and speaks of it as the "jingling sound of like endings."

13. welter, roll about : in Par. Lost, i. 78, Milton speaks of Satan as weltering in Hell, in which case the use of the word more nearly accords with modern usage.

to, here seems to have the sense of 'in accordance with' : comp. lines 33, 44. The use of the prepositions in Elizabethan writers is extremely varied.

It will be noticed that there is no rhyme to this line ; so with lines 1, 15, 22, 39, 51, 82; 91, 92, 161. But though these lines have no rhymes adjacent to them, they do not detract from the music of the verse : there are only about sixty different endings in the whole poem, and if assonantal rhymes be admitted the number is still further reduced. Besides, though line 1 has no adjacent rhyme, similar final sounds occur in lines 61, 63, 165, 167, 182, 183, just as lines 2, 5, 6, 9, 12, 14 rhyme together. This partly explains the resonance and beauty of the verse.

14. meed, recompense : comp. "A rosy garland is the victor's meed." Tit. Andron. i. 2.

melodious tear, tearful melody, an elegiac poem. Comp. the title of Spenser's Tears of the Muses; also Epitaph on M. of W. 55.

15. Sisters of the sacred well, the nine Muses, daughters of Jove: they are often mentioned in Greek poetry as the nymphs of Helicon, because Mount Helicon in Boeotia was one of their favourite haunts; on this mountain were two fountains sacred to the Muses; hence Milton's allusion to 'the sacred well.' Hesiod, in his Theogony, speaks of the Muses of Helicon dancing round "the altar of the mighty son of Kronos," i.e. Jupiter: this explains the allusion to "the seat of Jove" (Hales). (A simpler explanation is that the sacred well is the Pierian fountain at the foot of Mount Olympus, where the Muses were born, and that the 'seat of Jove' is Mount Olympus.)

17. somewhat loudly, not too softly.

sweep the string, strike the lyre. Elsewhere Milton calls music "stringed noise."

18. Hence: see note L'Alleg. 1.

coy excuse. 'Coy' = hesitating: the word is generally applied only to persons in the sense of 'shy'; it is the same word as 'quiet,' both being from Lat. quietus, the former through French. Coleridge says: "Here it is evidently personal—excuse showing coyness" (Drinkwater).

19. Muse, poet inspired by the Muse: hence the pronoun 'he' in l. 21: see Son. i. 13, note. Lines 19 to 22 form a parenthesis: l. 23 resumes the main theme.

20. lucky words, words of good luck, words expressing a good wish: see note, Epitaph on M. of W. 31.

my destined urn. The sense is: "As I now write a poem to the memory of Lycidas, so may some one, when I am dead, write kindly words about me," or 'so' may be the precativè sic, as in Hor. Odes, i. 3. 'Destined urn' = the death that I am destined to die: 'urn' is the vessel in which the Romans deposited the ashes of their dead, sometimes inscribed with the name and history of the dead: comp. 'storied urn,' Gray's Elegy, 41.

21. as he passes, in passing: comp. Gray's Elegy, 20, 'passing tribute of a sigh.'

'Turn,' i.e. may turn, co-ordinate with 'may favour' and (may) 'bid,' optative mood.

22. bid fair peace, etc. : 'pray that sweet peace may rest upon me in death.' 'Bid,' in the sense of 'pray,' has probably no radical connection with 'bid' = to command, and is nearly obsolete : 'to bid beads' was originally 'to pray prayers' (A.S. bed, a prayer). The word bead was then applied to the little balls used for counting the prayers, and is now used of any small ball. 'Be' is infinitive : see note, Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity, 76.

sable shroud : 'the darkness in which I am shrouded,' previously referred to figuratively as 'my destined urn.' Some interpret the words literally = 'my black coffin.' Etymologically 'shroud' is something cut off, and is allied to 'shred'; hence used of a garment. In Par. Lost, x. 1068, Milton uses it in this sense, and in Comus, 147, in the general sense of a covering or shelter. Its present uses as a noun are chiefly restricted to 'a dress for the dead' and (in the plural) to part of the rigging of a vessel.

23. nursed, etc. : a pastoral way of saying that they had been members of the same college at Cambridge, viz. Christ's.

24. Fed the same flock, employed ourselves in the same pursuits.

25. the high lawns : comp. L'Alleg. 71.

26. Under the opening eyelids, etc., i.e. at dawn. Morn is here personified : comp. Job, iii. 9, "Neither let it behold the eyelids of the morning"; Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet, ii. 3, "the grey-eyed morn"; see also Son. i. 5. The poet represents himself and Lycidas as spending the whole day together, from dawn to sultry noon, and from noon to dewy eve. As Warton points out, Milton was a very early riser, both in winter and summer, and the sunrise had great charm for him. In this poem, however, he may refer to the fixed hours of college duty.

27. We drove a-field. The prefix a is a corruption of on, the noun and preposition being fused together in one adverb : see L'Alleg. 20. 'We' is in agreement with 'both,' l. 27 ; and the verb 'drove' may be regarded as transitive, its object 'the same flock' being understood.

heard What time, etc. There are two possible renderings of this passage : (1) 'heard at what time the gray-fly,' etc., the object of 'heard' being the whole of line 28 ; or (2) 'heard the gray-fly at what time (she) winds,' etc. The latter, though it makes the object of the principal verb also the subject of the dependent verb, is preferable, for in Latin it frequently happens that words belonging to the principal clause are drawn into the relative clause.

28. gray-fly, the trumpet-fly, so called from the sharp humming sound produced by it, generally in the heat of the day ; hence the allusion to its "sultry horn."

29. Battening, sc. 'and afterwards.' Battening = feeding, making fat: here used transitively, though generally intransitive = to grow fat. The same root is seen in better. In this line with = along with, at the time of.

30. Oft till the star, etc. Keightley notes that "the evening star appears, not rises, and it is never anywhere but on heaven's descent"; nevertheless Milton refers to Venus (see Song on May Morning, l. note). In P.L. ix. 49 its office is "to bring twilight."

31. sloped his westering wheel: similarly in Comus, 98, the setting sun is called 'the slope sun,' and we read of 'his glowing axle' just as here we read of the star's 'wheel' or course in the heavens. 'Westering' = passing towards the west: now obsolete.

32. rural ditties: pastoral language for the early poetic efforts of Milton and King. 'Ditty' (Lat. dictatum, something dictated) originally meant the words of a song as distinct from the musical accompaniment; now applied to any little poem intended to be sung: comp. "am'rous ditties," Par. Lost, i. 447.

33. Tempered, attuned, timed (Lat. temperare, to regulate); the word qualifies ditties, and hence the semi-colon at end of l. 33. Masson has a semi-colon at end of l. 32; 'tempered' would then be absolute construction, or it would qualify 'Satyrs.'

to the oaten flute. 'To'; see note l. 13. The oaten flute is the flute or pipe made of reeds, and the favourite instrument in pastoral poetry: in Latin it is avena (= oats, a straw, and hence a shepherd's pipe): comp. lines 86, 88. 'Oaten'; the termination 'en' denotes 'made of': modern English has a tendency to use the noun as an adjective in such cases, e.g. a gold ring. Most of the adjectives in 'en' that still survive do not now denote the material, but simply resemblance, e.g. 'golden hair' = hair of the colour of gold. Such adjectives as birchen, beechen, firen, glassen, hornen, treen, thornen, etc., are now obsolete.

34. Satyrs ... Fauns; pastoral language for the men attending Cambridge at the same time as Milton and King. The Satyrs of Greek mythology were the representatives of the luxuriance of nature, and were always described as engaged in light pleasures, such as dancing, playing on the lute, or syrinx (see Arc. 106), etc. The Romans confounded them with their Fauni, represented as half men, half goats (Lat. semicapri), with cloven feet and horns; the chief was Faunus, whom the Romans identified with Pan (see Arc. 106).

36. old Damocles: this pastoral name occurs in Virgil, Theocritus, and Sidney: it here probably refers to Dr. W. Chappell, the tutor of Christ's College in Milton's time. Masson thinks it may be "Joseph Meade or some other well-remembered Fellow of Christ's."

38. Now thou, etc., i.e. now that thou art gone = seeing that thou art gone : comp. Son. xx. 2, and Wordsworth's Simon Lee, 25.

must return : 'must' here expresses certainty with regard to the future = thou wilt certainly never return. Coleridge notes in lines 37-44 "a delicate beauty of sound produced by the floating or oscillation of assonance, and consonance in the rhymes, gone, return, caves, o'ergrown, mourn, green, seen, lays." (C)

39. Thee : object of 'mourn,' l. 41. Ovid (Met. xi.) similarly represents birds, beasts, and trees as lamenting the death of Orpheus.

40. gadding, straggling. To gad is to wander about idly : Bacon calls Envy a gudding passion, and in the Bible we find— "Why gaddest thou about so much to change thy way," Jer. ii. Cicero uses the word erraticus (wandering) in connection with the vine.

41. their echoes, i.e. of the caves : comp. Song to Echo in Comus. In Shelley's Adonais the same idea occurs—

"Lost Echo sits amid the voiceless mountains,
And feeds her grief with his remembered lay."

42. hazel copses green. See note L'Alleg. 40.

'Copse,' a wood of small growth, is a corruption of coppice (Fr. couper, to cut).

44. Fanning : moving their leaves in unison with the music : with 'to' in this line, comp. 'to' in lines 13 and 33.

45. Lines 45 to 48 are in apposition to 'such,' line 49 : thus 'Thy loss to shepherd's ear was such' = 'Thy loss to shepherd's ear was as killing as,' etc. The word 'such' is redundant, being rendered necessary by the separation of the words 'as killing' from the rest of the principal clause.

canker : see Arc. 53 ; the more definite form 'canker-worm' is often used, just as 'taint-worm' is used in the next line. Warton notes that Shakespeare is fond of this simile.

46. taint-worm, also called the 'taint.' "There is found in summer a spider called a taint, of a red colour, and so little that ten of the largest will hardly outweigh a grain." Browne, Vulgar Errors. 'Taint' is cognate with lint, tinge, and tincture.

weanling herds, young animals that have just been weaned from the mother's milk. Ling is the diminutive suffix, as in yearling, darling, foundling. 'To wean' (A.S. wenian) is strictly 'to accustom to,' but is now used only in the sense of 'to disaccustom to.' The connection between the two meanings is obvious. 'Weanling' also occurs as 'yeanling' or 'eanling.'

47. gay wardrobe, bright and varied colours. By metonymy

'wardrobe,' in which clothes are kept, is applied to its contents: the flowers are here said to clothe themselves in gay colours. 'Wardrobe' = guard-robe (Fr. garde-robe): the usual law in such compounds is that the first word denotes the purpose for which the thing denoted by the second is used, e.g. inkstand, teaspoon, writing-desk.

48. white-thorn, hawthorn: the flower is sometimes called "May blossom."

49. to shepherd's ear, sc. 'when heard by him.' The use of 'killing' is here an instance of syllepsis: as applied to the herds, etc., it means literally 'deadly'; as used in this line it means 'dreadful.'

50. Where were ye, etc. This is imitated from the first Idyll of Theocritus, and the tenth Eclogue of Virgil, "but with the substitution of West British haunts of the Muses for their Greek haunts in those classic passages."

remorseless deep, unpitying or cruel sea; an instance of the pathetic fallacy which attributes human feelings to inanimate objects.

52. neither. This answers to 'nor' in line 55, so that the sense is "You were playing neither on the steep ... nor on the shaggy top."

the steep, 'the mountain where the Druidic bards are buried.' Milton probably refers to a mountain in Carnarvon, called Penmaenmawr, or to Kerig-i-Druidion in Denbigh, where there was a burying-place of the Druids. The Druids were the minstrels, priests, and teachers among the ancient Celts of Britain: in his History of England Milton calls them "our philosophers, the Druids." The word 'your' implies that the bards were followers of the Muses.

54. shaggy top of Mona high: the high interior of the island of Anglesey (known by the Romans as Mona), once the chief haunt of the Welsh Druids. The island was once thickly wooded: Selden says, "The British Druids took this isle of Anglesey, then well-stored with thick wood and religious groves; in so much that it was called Inis Dowil, 'The Dark Isle,' for their chief residence." This explains the allusion in the words 'shaggy top.'

55. Deva ... wizard stream, the river Dee, on which stands Chester, the port from which King sailed on his ill-fated voyage. In his poem At a Vacation Exercise Milton calls it "ancient hallowed Dee." Spenser also speaks of it as haunted by magicians, and Drayton tells how, being the ancient boundary between England and Wales, it foreboded evil fortune to that country towards which it changed its course and good to the other. The word 'wizard' is therefore very appropriately used here. In fact these lines (52-55) are interesting for two reasons : (1) their appropriateness to the subject, seeing that King was drowned off the Welsh coast ; (2) their evidence that Milton had already been engaged in careful reading of British legendary history with a view to the composition of an epic poem on some British subject—the first hints of which are conveyed in the Latin poems Mansus (1638) and Epitaphium Damonis (1639). In the former of these we find reference to the Druids, and in the latter to King Arthur.

'Wizard' is one of the few survivals in English of words with the termination ard or art, e.g. sluggard, braggart : the suffix had an intensive, and also a somewhat contemptuous force, though here 'wizard' merely denotes 'magical.'

56. Ay me! this exclamatory phrase = ah me ! Its form is due to the French aymi = 'ah, for me !' and has no connection with 'ay' or 'aye' = yes. Comp. Lat. me miserum.

fondly, foolishly : comp. Il Pens. 6 and Son. xix. 8.

57. There is an anacolouthon or break in the construction in the middle of this line. The poet, in addressing the nymphs, is about to say, 'Had you been there, you might have saved Lycidas'; but, recollecting that their presence could have done no good, he adds, 'for what could that have done?'

58. the Muse herself : Calliope, the Muse of epic poetry, and mother of Orpheus, who is here called 'her enchanting son' (see L'Alleg. 145, note). His grief for the loss of Eurydice led him to treat the Thracian women with contempt, and in revenge they tore him in pieces in the excitement of their Bacchanalian festivals (here called 'the hideous roar'). His head was thrown into the river Hebrus, and, being carried to the sea, was washed across to Lesbos, an island in the Ægean Sea. His lyre was also swept ashore there. Both traditions simply express the fact that Lesbos was the first great seat of the music of the lyre.

60. universal nature, all nature, animate and inanimate : see note on line 39.

61. rout, a disorderly crowd (as explained above). The word is also used in the sense of 'a defeat'; and is cognate with route, rote, and rut. The explanation is that all come from the Lat. ruptus, broken : a 'rout' is the breaking up of an army, or a crowd broken up ; a 'route' is a way broken through a forest ; a 'rote' is a beaten route or track, hence we say "to learn by rote" ; and a 'rut' is a track left by a wheel.

62. visage ; see note on Il Pens. 13.

63. swift Hebrus : a translation of Virgil's volucrem Hebrum (Æn. i. 321), supposed to be a corrupt reading, as the river is not swift.

64. what boots it, etc. : 'Of what profit is it to be a poet in these days when true poetry is slighted? Would it not be better, as many do, to give one's self up to trifling.' The passage is of interest, because (1) it illustrates Milton's high aspirations, and (2) it directs our attention to the historical fact that the literary outburst which began in 1580 was over. The poets who were alive in 1637 were such as Wither, Herrick, Shirley, May, Davenant, Suckling, Crashaw, etc. : they could not be compared with Spenser, Shakespeare, Marlowe, Ben Jonson, Beaumont, Fletcher, and others.

But Milton also uses 'the shepherd's trade' in the sense of Church work (see below). In ll. 64-84 he is thinking of Ed. King as poet, in ll. 113-129 as intended for the Church. The two aspects are deftly fused together at l. 123 where Church teaching becomes "lean and flashy songs."

uncessant, incessant. The tendency of modern English is to use a prefix belonging to the same language as the body of the word, so that 'cessant,' which is of Latin origin, takes the Lat. negative prefix in. This rule was not recognised in older English; hence in Milton we find such forms as 'unactive,' 'uncessant,' and in other writers, 'unpossible,' 'unglorious,' 'unpatient,' 'unhonest,' etc. On the other hand, there are anomalies in our present English that did not exist in the Elizabethan literature, e.g. 'uncertain' (formerly and more regularly 'incertain'), 'unfortunate,' etc. : comp. l. 176.

65. tend : the trans. verb (as here) is a short form of 'attend.' 'Tend,' to move in a certain direction, is intransitive.

homely, slighted, etc. These adjectives qualify 'trade,' not 'shepherd.' 'Trade' here denotes the practice of poetry. In lines 113-120 the shepherd's trade is not poetry, but the work of the Church. The former application of the words is found in all pastoral poetry, the latter in the Scriptures.

In Com. 748, Milton gives the derivation of 'homely'; 'It is for homely features to keep home'; comp. Son. xii a. 20, note. Spenser, in his Shepherd's Calendar, speaks of the 'homely shepherd's quill.'

66. strictly, rigorously, devotedly.

meditate the thankless Muse : apply one's self to the thankless task of writing poetry.

'Meditate' is here used transitively like the Lat. meditari, which does not mean merely to ponder or think upon, but to apply one's self with close attention to a subject. The phrase occurs in Vergil (Ecl. i. 2; vi. 8). As a transitive verb, 'meditate' has now the meaning of 'purpose'; e.g. he meditated revenge.

'Thankless,' as applied to the Muse,' is 'ungrateful': comp. Virgil, Æn. vii. 425.

67. Were it not, etc. : subjunctive mood.

use, are accustomed (to do). The present tense of the verb 'to use' is obsolete in this sense: we can say 'he used to do this,' but not 'he uses to do this.' The present tense is found in the following passage: "They use to place him that shall be their captain upon a stone always reserved for that purpose."—Spenser. Compare such words as ought, must, durst, wot, wont, etc., all originally past tenses: see note, Il. Pens. 37.

68. Amaryllis ... Neæra's hair. These are the names of imaginary shepherdesses from the Greek and Latin pastorals. (See Virgil's first three Eclogues.) Milton expresses, in one of his prose works, great fondness for the 'smooth elegiac poets,' but in the last of his Latin Elegies he announces his intention of turning his mind to other subjects—

... "Learning taught me, in his shady bower,
To quit Love's servile yoke, and spurn his power."
Cowper's Translation.

Warton thinks that the allusion to Amaryllis and Neæra is made with special reference to certain poems by Buchanan in which he addresses females by these names.

69. tangles, locks or curls; comp. Peele's David and Bethsabe—

"Now comes my lover tripping like the roe,
And brings my longings tangled in her hair."

70. Fame is the spur that incites the noble mind to high efforts: comp. Par. Reg. iii. 25—

"Glory, the reward
That sole excites to high attempts the flame
Of most erected spirits, most tempered pure
Ethereal, who all pleasures else despise,
All treasures and all gain esteem as dross,
And dignities and powers, all but the highest."

Also Spenser: "Due praise, that is the spur of doing well."

clear, in the sense of Lat. clarus, noble, pure. 'Spirit' is the object of 'doth raise.'

71. This bracketed line is in apposition to 'Fame,' though in reality it is not fame that is meant but the love of fame, which, as Massinger says, is 'the last weakness wise men put off.' The idea is found in Tacitus: "Etiam sapientibus cupido gloriæ novissima exuitur"; and by the use of the word that in line 71, Milton seems to signify that he regarded the expression as a well-known one.

72. This line states the high efforts to which the love of fame will incite men, viz., "to scorn delights and live laborious days."

73. guerdon, reward: grammatically, object of 'find.' The formation of this word is peculiar; the second part is from Lat. donum, gift; and the first part from an old High German word meaning 'back,' and corresponding to the Lat. prefix re in reward, etc.

74. blaze: comp. Arc. 74 and Par. Reg. iii. 47: "For what is glory but the blaze of fame?" The whole of the passage in Par. Reg., like this part of Lycidas, has a certain biographical interest, for we see here Milton's estimate of the worth of popular applause.

75. blind Fury; nomin. to verb 'comes.'

The three goddesses of vengeance were called Furies by the Romans, but Milton's reference to 'the abhorred shears' shows that he is thinking of one of the Fates (see Arc. 65, note), viz. Atropos. She is here said to be blind because she is no respecter of persons. Milton probably used the word Fury in a general sense as signifying the cruelty of Fate, or he may mean to denote Destiny: comp. Shak. King John, iv. 2, "Think you I have the shears of Destiny."

76. thin-spun life, i.e. the thin-spun or fragile thread of life, in allusion to the uncertainty of human life as shown in the case of Edward King. For the form of the adjective comp. Il Pens. 66.

"But not the praise." Phoebus (i.e. Apollo), as the god of song, here checks the poet, reminding him that though Fate may deprive the poet of life it cannot deprive him of his due meed of true praise. The construction is, "Fate slits the thin-spun life, but does not slit the praise": there is therefore a zeugma in 'slits'; it is applied to life in its literal sense 'to cut,' and to praise in the sense of 'to intercept.'

77. touched my trembling ears, i.e. touched the ears of me trembling: comp. note on L'Alleg. 124. Masson's acute note on this is: "A fine poetical appropriation of the popular superstition that the tingling of a person's ears is a sign that people are talking of him. What Milton had been saying about poetic fame might be understood, he saw, as applicable to himself." Comp. Virgil's Eclog. vi. 3. The rhymes of lines 70-77 are ababacac.

78. 'Fame is not found in this life, and dwells neither in the glittering leaf displayed in the world, nor in the wide-spread rumour.'

mortal soil, this earth. The epithet mortal is transferred from life to the scene of life. 'Mortal' here denotes 'associated with death'; Milton also uses it in the senses of 'causing death = fatal, and 'human.'

79. Nor ... nor, neither ... nor : common in poetry.

glistening; from the same base as glisten, glitter, glint, gleam, glow.

foil, applied to a leaf or thin plate of shining metal placed under a gem to increase its lustre (Lat. folium, a leaf): so Fame is not a gem that requires to be set off by the use of some foil; it shines by its own light. 'Set off' qualifies 'Fame,' not 'foil.'

80. lies, dwells; as often in Old English. Comp. L'Alleg. 79.

81. by, by means of, i.e. because it is perceived by. Comp. "God is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity."

82. perfect witness, searching and infallible discrimination. The old spelling of this word (which is found in Milton) is perfet, the French form being parfait (Lat. perfectus, done thoroughly).

83. pronounces lastly, decides finally: see Son. xxi. 3, note.

84. meed: see line 14, note. This ends the sublime strain of Phoebus, which (as Milton says in line 87) "was of a higher mood" than the ordinary pastoral. He now returns again to his 'oaten pipe' (see Analysis).

85. Arethuse: see Arc. 30. The poet invokes the fountain of Arethusa in the island of Ortygia, off Sicily, because Theocritus was a Sicilian; hence the words "Sicilian Muse," l. 133. He also invokes the Mincius, which falls into the river Po, below Mantua in North Italy, because Virgil was a native of Mantua. Hence the significance of the words 'honoured flood' and 'vocal reeds.'

88. my oat, my pastoral muse. The construction is peculiar, 'oat' being apparently nominative to 'proceeds' and 'listens.' We may either take the nominative I out of the possessive my, or suppose that the Muse listens; but see note on L'Alleg. 122, "judge the prize."

89. the Herald of the Sea: Triton, represented by the Romans as bearing a 'wreathed horn' or shell, which he blew at the command of Neptune in order to still the waves of the sea. He is here supposed by Milton to appear 'in Neptune's plea,' i.e. to defend him from the suspicion of having caused Lycidas' death by a storm, and to discover the real cause of the shipwreck. 'Plea' and 'plead' are cognate words.

91. felon, here used attributively. The origin of the word is doubtful; its radical sense is probably 'treacherous' (as in this passage). In the ms. the poet wrote fellon, but this is not, as some think, a different word, though it may be cognate with fell = fierce.

92. The mark of interrogation at the end of this line and the use of the present perfect tense 'hath doomed,' show that it gives the actual words of Triton's question; otherwise the dependent verb (by sequence of tenses, would have been 'had doomed.'

93. of rugged wings, 'rugged-winged,' having rugged wings, i.e. tempestuous.

94. each beaked promontory, each pointed cape. Observe the proximity of the words every and each, where we might have expected every ... every, or each ... each: comp. Com. 19 and 311. 'Every' is radically = ever each (Old English everaelc): it denotes each without exception, and can now only be used with reference to more than two objects; 'each' may refer to two or more.

95. They (i.e. the waves and winds) knew nothing of the fate of Lycidas. Observe the double or feminine rhymes,—promontory, story.

96. sage Hippotadès; the wise ruler of the winds, Æolus, son of Hippotès: he brings the answer of the winds to the effect "that not a blast was from its dungeon strayed." 'Hippotadès' is a Greek patronymic, formed by the suffix -des, seen in Boreades, son of Boreas; Priamides, son of Priam, etc. Comp. Homer's Odyssey, x. 2.

97. was ... strayed: in modern English we say 'had strayed'; the auxiliary 'have' being now more common than 'be.' See note, Son. ii. 6, and comp. 'was dropt,' l. 191.

his dungeon: the winds are probably here personified, hence the pronoun 'his' (but see note, Il Pens. 128). Milton's language here is evidently suggested by Virgil's picture of the winds (Æn. i. 50), where they are represented as confined within a vast cave: Virgil there speaks of Æolia as the 'fatherland' of the winds, thus poetically endowing them with personality. 'Dungeon,' prison, literally 'the chief tower': it is another form of the old French word donjon, from Lat. dominionem, and therefore cognate with 'dominion,' 'domain,' etc.

98. level brine, the placid sea. 'Brine' denotes salt water, and by a figure of speech is applied to the ocean whose waters are salt.

99. Panopè and her sister, the daughters of Nereus, hence called Nereids: in classical mythology they were the nymphs who dwelt in the Mediterranean Sea, distinct from the fresh-water nymphs, and the nymphs of the great Ocean. Their names and duties are given in the Faery Queene, iv. 11. 49; see also Virgil, Georg. i. 437.

100. fatal and perfidious bark, the ill-fated and treacherous ship in which King sailed: it went down in perfectly calm weather, and hence the force of Triton's plea on Neptune's behalf. 'Bark,' also spelt 'barque,' is etymologically the same as 'barge'; but the latter is now only used of a kind of boat. 'Fatal' = appointed by fate; 'perfidious' = faithless (Lat. per, away; and fides, faith).

101. Built in the eclipse: this circumstance is imagined by the poet in order to account for the wreck of the ship, eclipses being popularly supposed to bring misfortune upon all undertakings begun or carried on while they lasted. The moon's eclipse was specially unlucky, but in Shakespeare's Hamlet we read also of "disasters in the sun," and similarly in Par. Lost, i. 597. An eclipse was supposed to be a favourite occasion for the machinations of witches: in Macbeth, iv. 1 we read that "slips of yew slivered in the moon's eclipse" formed one of the ingredients in the witches' cauldron.

rigged with curses dark. To rig a ship is to fit it with the necessary sails, ropes, etc.; and by a bold figure the poet says that King's vessel was fitted out with curses; at least this is the sense if 'with' be taken to mean 'by means of.' Some prefer to interpret 'with' as 'in the midst of,' the sense being that the ship was cursed by the witches while it was being rigged.

102. That sunk: 'that,' relative pronoun, antecedent 'bark.' 'Sunk' = sank; for the explanation compare Morris's English Accidence—"The verbs swim, begin, run, drink, shrink, sink, ring, sing, spring, have for their proper past tenses swam, began, ran, etc., preserving the original a; but in older writers (sixteenth and seventeenth centuries) and in colloquial English we find forms with u, which have come from the passive participles."

that sacred head of thine. This is a pleonastic expression: it will be noticed that when the noun denotes the possession of one object only, this form is inadmissible unless preceded by a demonstrative (as here), e.g. we can say 'that body of yours,' because a person has only one body, but we cannot say 'a body of yours,' as this word would imply that one of a number was referred to.

'Sacred': etymologically signifies the same as 'consecrated,' 'set apart,' and hence 'devoted': it may be used here of Lycidas as devoted to death: comp. Par. Lost, iii. 208—"To destruction sacred and devote."

103. Camus: "the genius of the Cam River and of Cambridge University was naturally one of the mourners for Lycidas." 'Reverend sire' is an allusion to the antiquity of the University. Sire, sir, senior, seignior, and signor all owe their origin to the nomin. or accus. form of the Lat. senior, elder.

103. went footing slow, passed slowly along, wended his way slowly. As Camus comes forward to bewail Lycidas we should naturally read 'came' in this line instead of 'went,' because in modern English the meanings of 'go' and 'come' are opposed. But it is not so here: went is radically the past tense of wend (A.S. wendan, to turn), but is now used in place of the obsolete past of go; so that it has become necessary to make a new form for the past tense of 'wend,' viz. wended. For 'go' cf. Shakespeare, 2 Hen. IV. ii. l. 191; M. N. D. i. l. 115. Wend is the causal form of wind, and is therefore peculiarly appropriate to the winding Cam. It is now nearly obsolete except in the phrase 'to wend one's way.'

'Foot' as a verb is generally followed by the cognate accusative 'it,' but it then denotes sprightly movement, and is therefore unsuitable here (see L'Alleg. 33). 'Slow-footing' occurs in Spenser as a compound adjective.

104. His mantle hairy, etc. Here 'mantle' and 'bonnet' are in the absolute case. The 'hairy mantle' is the hairy river-weed that is found floating on the Cam, and the 'bonnet' is the sedge that grows in the river and along its edge. In his first Elegy Milton alludes to the reedy or sedgy Cam (arundiferum Camum, juncosas Cami paludes). 'Bonnet,' now generally applied to a head-dress worn by women, here denotes (as it still does in Scotland) a man's cap.

105. Inwrought with figures dim, having indistinct markings worked into it. 'Inwrought' is a participial adjective (as if from a verb incork, which is not in use), qualifying 'bonnet': to work in figures into cloth, etc., is to embroider or adorn. Milton refers to the peculiar natural markings seen on the leaves of sedge, especially when they begin to wither.

The edge of the 'sedge bonnet' of the Cam is said to be like the edge of the hyacinth because it is marked: the hyacinth was fabled by the ancients to have sprung from the blood of the Spartan youth Hyacinthus, and the markings on the petals were said to resemble the words δι δι (alas! alas!) or the letter Υ, the Greek initial of Hyacinthus: hence the significance of the words 'sanguine' and 'inscribed with woe.' The poet Drummond calls the hyacinth "that sweet flower that bears in sanguine spots the tenor of our woes." Similarly Milton fancies that the markings on the sedge may signify the grief of Cambridge for the death of Lycidas.

106. Like to that sanguine flower. Here the preposition 'to' is expressed after 'like': see note on Il Pens. 69. 'Sanguine,' bloody, an illustration of Milton's fondness for the primary sense of words (Lat. sanguis, blood): its present meaning is 'hopeful,' and the connecting link between the two meanings is found in the old theory of the four humours of the body, an excess of the bloody humour making persons of a hopeful disposition. In the primary sense we now use 'sanguinary.'

107. reft : see note on 'bereft,' Son. xxii. 3.

quoth he, he said : this verb always precedes its nominative, and is used only in the first and third persons : it is really a past tense (though occasionally used as a present), and the original present is seen only in the compound be-queath.

pledge, child : comp. Lat. pignus, a pledge or security, also applied (generally in the plural) to children or relations.

108. Last came ... did go : see note on Il Pens. 46.

109. The Pilot of the Galilean Lake : St. Peter, here introduced as Head of the Church, because King had been intended for the Church. St. Peter was at first a fisherman on the Sea of Galilee (Matt. iv. 18) and became one of the disciples of Christ. It was of him that Christ said : "Upon this rock will I build my church ; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it. I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. xvi. 18. R. V.) It was he also whom Christ constituted the Shepherd of the Christian flock by his parting charge : "Feed my lambs." (John xxi. 15.) In both of his capacities, as Head and Shepherd of the Christian Church, he mourns the death of one who promised to be a true disciple, unlike the false shepherds who crept into the Church "for their bellies' sake."

110. Two massy keys : the keys that St. Peter carried as the symbol of his power are usually spoken of as two in number (though there is no such statement in the Scriptures), because he had power both in heaven and hell, the golden one opening the gates of heaven, and the iron one forcibly closing them : comp. Com. 13 :

"that golden key
That opes the palace of eternity."

'Massy,' massive : see note Il Pens. 58.

of metals twain, made of two different metals : twain (cognate with two) is, in older English, used (1) predicatively, (2) when it follows the noun (as here), and (3) as a noun.

111. amain, with force : a is here the usual adverbial prefix (see note l. 27) ; main = strength or force, as in the phrase 'with might and main.' The adjective main, = principal, is only indirectly connected with it, being from Lat. magnus, great. Ope 'for 'open' is found in poetry, both as verb and adjective.

112. mitred locks, locks crowned with a bishop's head-dress, St. Peter being regarded as the first bishop of the Church.

stern bespake, said with indignation. Milton sometimes used the verb bespeak as a transitive verb = to address (a person); in modern English both these senses are obsolete and it now denotes 'to speak for,' 'to engage beforehand.'

113. Here for the second time the poem rises far above the ordinary pastoral strain and Milton puts into the mouth of St. Peter his first explicit declaration of his sympathy with the Puritans in their opposition to the attempt of Archbishop Laud to introduce changes in the ritual of the English and Scottish Churches, an attempt which hastened the downfall of Charles I. and Laud himself: see notes on Son. xii a., xv., xvi. As early as 1584, Spenser had also written in vehement strain against the corruptions of the Church, and there is a faint echo of Spenser's language here and there throughout Milton's indignant lines. (See Analysis).

spared for thee, etc., i.e. given up, in return for you, an ample number of the corrupt clergy.

114. Enow: here used as in Early English to denote a number; it is also spelt anow, and in Chaucer ynowe, and is the plural of enough. It still occurs as a provincialism in England.

such as: see L'Alleg. 29.

for their bellies' sake: comp. Son. xvi. 14, where the reference is to the Presbyterian clergy; here he means the Episcopalian ministers.

115. The Church is a sheepfold into which the "hireling wolves" (see Son. xvi. 14), i.e. the corrupt clergy, intrude themselves; their only care being to share the endowments of the Church. One of Milton's pamphlets was entitled The likeliest Means to remove Hirelings out of the Church. Comp. Par. Lost, iv. 192, and John, x. 12.

116. "They make little reckoning of any care other than," etc.

117. scramble: this word, and 'shove' in the next line, express the eager and rude striving for those church endowments that are here called 'the shearers' feast.' The 'worthy bidden guest' denotes the conscientious and faithful clergy.

119. Blind mouths! a figure of speech into which Milton condenses the greatest contempt. 'Mouths' is put by synecdoche for 'gluttons,' and 'blind' is therefore quite applicable. They are blind guides "whose Gospel is their maw" (Son. xvi. 14). By saying that they scarcely know how to hold a sheep-hook or crook (which is the symbol of the shepherd's task) the poet signifies their unfitness for 'the faithful herdman's art,' i.e. for pastoral duty. Cf. Ruskin, Sesame and Lilies, §§ 20-4.

120. the least, may be regarded as an adverbial phrase, modifying 'belongs,' = in the least; or it may be attributive to 'aught.'

121. herdman : this spelling, which occurs in the Bible, is not now in use, nor is it that of Milton's manuscript ; he wrote 'herdsman,' which is current in the restricted sense of 'one who herds cattle.' Milton applies it to a shepherd, the word being then used generally.

122. What recks it them? = what does it reck them? = what do they care? Here we have an old impersonal use of the verb 'to reck,' which still survives in the adjective reckless.

They are sped, they have sped = they have gained their object. For the use of the auxiliary 'are' instead of 'have,' see note on l. 97. One of the early meanings of speed is 'success,' and to speed is to be successful (as in this line): comp. Par. Lost, x. 39. It occurs in older English both of good and ill success, and also in the sense of 'to assist' (Shakespeare has 'God speed the Parliament'), 'to send away quickly,' 'to destroy,' etc.

123. when they list, when it pleases them. The verb list is, in older English, generally used impersonally, and in Chaucer we find 'if thee lust' or 'if thee list' = if it please thee. It is derived from A.S. lust, pleasure, and survives in the adjective listless, of which the older form was lustless. The noun lust has lost the meaning it had in A.S. and still has in German, and now signifies 'longing desire.'

✓ lean and flashy songs: pastoral language for 'their teaching, which is without substance or nourishment to their hearers.' 'Flashy' = showy but worthless: comp. Dryden, "flashy wit"; and Bacon, "distilled books are ... flashy things."

124. Grate, etc. : 'sound harshly on their weak and wretched oaten pipes'—a description in pastoral language of the preaching of the careless clergy. 'Grate' and 'scrannel' are here skilfully chosen to express contempt. 'Grate': the nominative of this verb is 'songs,' the sense being intermediate between the active form 'they grate their songs,' and the passive, 'their songs are grated.' Hence some would regard this as a middle voice. In Latin and Greek the passive voice arose from the middle or reflective verb. Comp. Il. Pens. 161.

scrannel, not found in English dictionaries, being a provincialism = 'lean': the harsh sound of the word also suits the passage. Comp. Virgil's Ecl. iii. 26.

125. The hungry sheep, the neglected congregations. Compare Milton's Epitaph Damon.—

"Nor please me more my flocks ; they, slighted, turn Their unavailing looks on me, and mourn."

Cowper's Translation.

126. swoln with wind, etc., with minds filled with unsound and unwholesome teaching.

rank = coarse, foul : 'draw' = inhale, e.g. to draw breath comp. Par. Lost, viii. 284, "From where I first drew air." The Lat. haurio has the same sense.

127. Rot inwardly, etc., have their hearts corrupted, and disseminate false doctrines.

128. Besides. The meaning is : "While all this injury to the Church is taking place, there is another source of loss to which the English clergy seem to be indifferent, viz. the desertions to the Church of Rome that are so frequent."

The grim wolf, the Church of Rome : comp. Matt. vii. 16, "Beware of false prophets which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves." Also Acts, xx. 29, "Grievous wolves shall enter in among you, not sparing the flock." 'Privy' = secret. 'Apace' = rapidly, at a great pace : comp. notes on amain, a-field.

129. and nothing said. Milton may here refer to Archbishop Laud's leaning towards Popery. Grammatically, there would seem to be a confusion here between two constructions : (1) 'and nothing (is) said,' and (2) 'nothing (being) said.' The latter would be the absolute construction, and in Shakespeare it sometimes happens that a noun intended to be used absolutely is diverted, by a change of thought, into a subject ; the opposite process may have taken place here.

130. two-handed engine. The sense is. "But the instrument of retribution is ready and punishment will swiftly fall upon the corrupt Church." 'Engine' = instrument, its literal sense being something skilful (Lat. ingenium, skill). 'Two-handed' denotes some formidable instrument : cf. Par. Lost, vi., 'with huge two-handed sway' ; also the two-handed flail of Talus (F. Q. v. 1). Milton's vague prophecy has opened a way for endless conjecture regarding the 'engine' he had in view. Among the suggested interpretations are :—

(1) That it denotes the axe by which Laud was afterwards to be beheaded in 1645, Milton's words being thus prophetic. This view may be set aside : it certainly did not occur to any one at the time of the publication of Lycidas, when the power of Laud was at its height.

(2) That the axe is that alluded to metaphorically in the Scriptures as the instrument of reformation : see St. Matt. iii. 10, "And now the axe is laid to the root of the tree ; therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down." In Milton's treatise Of Reformation in England he speaks of "the axe of God's reformation hewing at the old and hollow trunk of Papacy." This view is both the most obvious and the most probable. That Milton alludes to the two-doored temple of Janus or to coming war with two Catholic Powers (France and Spain) is very unlikely.

(3) That there is an allusion to the "two-edged sword" which proceedeth out of the mouth of the Living One (see Rev. i. 16).

(4) That the poet refers to the powers of the pure Gospel as contained in the Old and New Testaments.

(5) That the English Parliament with its two Houses is meant, "the agency by which, three or four years afterwards, the doors of the Church of England were dashed in."

(6) That it denotes civil and ecclesiastical power. See note on Son. xvii. 12.

132. The poet again descends to the level of the ordinary pastoral, though it should be observed that in lines 113-131 he has skilfully adapted pastoral language to an unusual theme. The "dread voice" is the voice of St. Peter, and it is to this passage that Milton refers in the sub-title to the poem prefixed on its republication in 1645. "In 1638 it had been bold enough to let the passage stand in the poem, as published in the Cambridge memorial volume, without calling attention to it in the title" (Masson).

Alpheus : see Arc. 30, note. A river of Arcadia.

133. That shrunk thy streams, i.e. which silenced my pastoral muse. The figure is a Scriptural one : "The waters stood above the mountains ; at thy rebuke they fled ; at the voice of thy thunder they hasted away," Psalms, civ. 7. 'Shrunk' is here used in an active or causal sense = made to shrink, as in the phrase 'to shrink cloth.'

Sicilian Muse, the muse of pastoral poetry : see note on l. 85.

134. hither cast, i.e. come hither and cast. Compare the Lat. idiom, se in silvas abdiderunt, "they hid themselves into the woods," i.e. "they went into the woods and hid there," Ovid. See also l. 139.

135. bells, bell-shaped blossoms. Plants with bell-shaped flowers are technically called 'campanulate' (Ital. campana, a bell).

flowerets : 'floweret' is diminutive of 'flower.'

136. use, dwell, frequent. The verb is quite obsolete in this sense : comp. note, l. 67. In Spenser we find, "In these strange ways, where never foot did use."

137. The construction is, "Where the mild whispers of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks, dwell."

138. lap ; by a common figure we speak of 'the lap of earth,' 'the earth's bosom,' etc. : comp. Gray's Elegy, "Here rests his head upon the lap of earth"; also Rich. II. v. 2, "the green lap of the new-come spring." The word is connected with 'lap' = wrap (L'Alleg. 136).

the swart star sparely looks, i.e. "where the influence of the burning dog-star is scarcely felt," the flowers being therefore fresh and bright. The swart star is Sirius or Canicula, a star just in the mouth of the constellation Canis, hence called the dog-star (Lat. canis, a dog). Hence also the term "dog days." To the Greeks and Romans this star appeared at the hottest time of the year, and was by them regarded as the cause of the great heat. It is therefore here called 'swart,' i.e. swart-making, because by exposure to heat the face becomes swarthy or brown. Milton frequently transfers an epithet from the object of an action to the agent: comp. "oblivious pool" = pool that makes one oblivious (Par. Lost, i. 266), "forgetful lake," etc. There are four forms of the adjective: the earliest is swart, then swarty, swarth, and finally swarthy: all four forms occur in Shakespeare.

For the technical sense of 'looks,' comp. Arc. 52. It may be noted that in Epit. Damon. Milton speaks of the evil influence of the planet Saturn upon the fortunes of shepherds.

139. quaint enamelled eyes, i.e. blossoms neat and bright. The centre of a blossom is sometimes called an 'eye'; the name is also given to a tender bud or even to a flower (as here). Milton's use of the word 'enamelled' is illustrated in Arc. 84, and his use of 'quaint' in Arc. 47; see notes. Comp. Peele's David and Bethsabe: "May that sweet plain ... be still enamelled with discoloured (i.e. variegated) flowers."

140. honeyed showers, sweet and refreshing rain. 'Honeyed' is here used figuratively; comp. "honeyed words" = flattery. It is sometimes, but less correctly, spelt 'honied': comp. Il Pens. 142.

141. purple, here used as a verb. The meaning is that the spring flowers are so abundant that they give the green turf a purple tint: comp. Par. Lost, vii. 28, "When morn purples the east." In Latin purpureus is common in the sense of 'dazzling.'

vernal, pertaining to Spring (Lat. ver).

142. Lines 142-151 form (as Masson says) "the most exquisite flower-and-colour passage in all Milton's poetry. His manuscript shows that he brought it to perfection by additions and after thoughts." "For musical sweetness and dainty richness of floral colour, it beats perhaps anything else in all Milton. It is the call upon all valleys of the landscape, and the banks of all the secret streamlets, to yield up their choicest flowers, and those dearest to shepherds that they may be strewn over the dead body of Lycidas." A similar fancy is found in Shakespeare: "With fairest flowers ... I'll sweeten thy sad grave." Cymb. iv. 2.

Those critics who judge the beauty of any poetical reference to nature by its fidelity to actual fact may readily object that

Milton would here bring together flowers that are never found in bloom at the same time of the year. But the season of the year does not enter into Milton's thoughts except in so far as it enables him to characterize some of the flowers. His only concern is to honour the grave of his fellow-shepherd by heaping upon it a rich offering of nature's fairest and sweetest flowers—flowers that, by their purity or their "sad embroidery," are well fitted to "strew the laureate hearse where Lycid lies."

In connection with this passage Mr. Ruskin writes:—"In Milton it happens, I think, generally, and in the case before us most certainly, that the imagination is mixed and broken with fancy, and so the strength of the imagery is part of iron and part of clay." Lines 142, 145, and 147 he considers 'imaginative'; lines 144 and 146 'fanciful'; line 143 'nugatory'; and line 148 'mixed.'

rathe, early: the root of this word survives in the comparative rather: comp. "The rather lambs be starved with cold" (Spenser), where rather is an adjective. Tennyson has: "the men of rathe and riper years" (In Mem. cx.). Rather is now used only as an adverb, except perhaps in the phrase 'I had rather'; in 'I would rather' it is certainly an adverb. The Old English rath=early (adj.); rathe=soon (adv.).

that forsaken dies, i.e. 'that dies because it is forsaken by the sun-light,' a reference to the fact that it is often found in shady places. Milton at first wrote 'unwedded,' showing that he had in mind Shakespeare's words, "Pale primroses that die unmarried, ere they can behold Bright Phoebus (i.e. the sun) in his strength": Winter's Tale, iv. 4.

143. tufted crow-toe. This plant is more commonly called "crow-foot," both names having reference to the shape of the flower: comp. 'bird's foot trefoil,' belonging to the same order of plants. Another similar plant is the tufted vetch, and this epithet correctly describes the appearance of all these plants when in flower.

pale jessamine. 'Jessamine' or jasmine, a plant which belongs originally to the East; hence the name, from Persian yāsmīn.

144. pink, a flower which has given name to a particular colour; similarly the colour called 'violet' receives its name from the flower, and 'mauve' is the colour of the 'mallow.' The reverse process is seen in 'carnation,' this flower having received its name from its fleshy colour (Lat. caro, flesh). Some varieties of the pink are white.

pansy freaked with jet, a species of violet having generally dark spots in the centre of its blossoms. 'Freaked'=spotted or marked; this word is now little used except in the diminutive freckles=small dark spots (as those on some faces). Shakespeare speaks of the 'freckled cowslip.'

146. well-attired woodbine, i.e. the honey-suckle with its clusters of flowers. 'Well-attired' does not here mean well-clothed or covered with leaves, but 'having a beautiful head-dress of flowers.' 'Tire' (the prefix being dropped) occurs in the same sense. The word is now extended to the whole dress: comp. On Time, 21.

147. hang the pensive head: 'pensive' is here used proleptically, i.e. it denotes the result of the action expressed by the verb 'hang': comp. Arc. 87.

148. sad embroidery; or, as Milton originally wrote, "sorrow's livery," i.e. colours suited to mourning. 'To embroider' is strictly to adorn with needlework, hence used in the sense of 'to ornament,' and finally 'to diversify by different colours.'

149. amaranthus, a plant so called because its flowers last long without withering. In Par. Lost it occurs as 'amarant,' the adjective being 'amarantine,' which comes directly from the Greek amarantos, unfading. The word is cognate with 'ambrosia,' the food of the gods, both having their counterpart in the Sanskrit amrita, immortal.

his beauty shed: 'his' here stands for 'its': see note on Il Pens. 128. 'Shed' is the infinitive after 'bid'; so is 'fill' in the next line.

150. daffadillies, more commonly written 'daffodils.' There is also a more colloquial form, daffadown-dilly, which occurs in Spenser. Comp. Par. Lost, ix. 1040, "Pansies and violets and asphodel." 'Daffodil' and 'asphodel' are the same, both name and thing: the initial d is no part of the word, and in earlier English it was written affodille, which is from an old French word asphodile, which again is from the Greek asphodelos, a flower of the lily tribe. The dew-drops resting in the hollow of the lilies are here spoken of as tears shed for Lycidas.

151. laureate hearse, the poet's tomb. The word 'laureate' here signifies that Lycidas was a poet and was lamented by poets. Another interpretation is that it refers to the fact that King had obtained an academical degree: see note on Son. xvi. 9. 'Hearse' now denotes the carriage in which the dead are carried to the grave, and even the meaning which Milton here gives it is not the primary one. The changes of meaning which this word has shown are: (1) a harrow, i.e. a frame of wood fitted with spikes, and used for breaking up the soil; (2) a frame of similar shape in which lighted candles were stuck during church service; (3) a frame for lights at a funeral; (4) a funeral ceremony, a monument, etc.; (5) a frame on which a dead body is laid; (6) a carriage for a dead body; comp. Epitaph on M. of W. 58. 'Lycid' = Lycidas, the suffix being dropped.

152. The sense is: 'Let us thus, in order to comfort ourselves for a little, please our weak fancies by imagining that we actually have the corpse of Lycidas to strew with flowers, even while, alas! his bones are being drifted about by the waves.'

Some editions read a comma after 'for,' and connect 'so' with 'to interpose': it seems better to read 'so' with 'for,' thus making 'to interpose,' etc., a clause of purpose.

154. There is a zeugma in wash as applied to 'shores' and 'seas.' Comp. Virgil's Æn. vi. 362: "my body is sometimes tossed by the waves, and sometimes thrown on the shore." The pathetic allusions in Lycidas to King's death at sea may be compared throughout with Virgil's language on the death of the pilot Palinurus, especially in the closing lines of Book v.:

"O nimium caelo et pelago confise sereno, Nudus in ignota, Palinure, jacebis harena."

156. Hebrides, or Western Isles, a range of about 200 islands, scattered along the western coast of Scotland. King having been wrecked in the Irish Sea, his body may (according to Milton) have been carried far north to the Hebrides or far south to the coast of Cornwall, these two parts being the extremities of Great Britain.

157. whelming: the compound 'overwhelming' is more commonly used.

158. the bottom of the monstrous world, i.e. the bottom of the sea, "there being more room for the marvellous among the creatures of the deep than among the better known inhabitants of the land." 'Monstrous' is therefore here used literally = full of monsters. Comp. Par. Lost, ii. 624, "Nature breeds, Perverse, all monstrous, all prodigious things"; also Virgil's Æn. 729, "Quae marmores fert monstra sub aequora pontus."

159. Or whether. This would naturally answer to 'whether' in line 156, but there is another anacolouthon, or change of construction; the first 'whether' introduces an adverbial phrase, while the second introduces a complete sentence.

to our moist vows denied, i.e. your body being denied to our tearful prayers. 'Moist' is properly applicable to the eyes of those praying for the recovery of Lycidas' body. There may be an allusion in 'vows' to those promises of thanksgiving and offerings made to Neptune that he might restore the bodies of those who had been drowned. Comp. Arc. 6.

160. fable of Bellerus old, i.e. the fabled abode of the old Cornish giant Bellerus. Bellerium was the Latin name for Land's End in Cornwall, and Milton 'fables' this name to have been derived from Bellerus, though no such name occurs in the catalogue of the old Cornish giants. There was, however, a giant named Corineus, said to have come into Britain with Brute, and in his first draft of the poem Milton wrote 'Corineus,' not 'Bellerus' (pron. Bellérus).

161. great Vision of the guarded mount. The 'guarded mount' is St. Michael's Mount, near Land's End, on which there is a crag called St. Michael's Chair. The tradition is that the 'vision' (or apparition) of the Archangel had been seen seated on this crag. Milton, therefore, speaks of the Mount as 'guarded' by the Archangel.

162. Looks toward Namancos, etc. Namancos is in the province of Galicia, near Cape Finisterre, in Spain (the name being found in old maps). Bayona is also in Galicia. "It was a boast of the Cornish people that there was a direct line of sea-view from Land's End passing France altogether and hitting no European land till it reached Spain" (see map of Europe).

163. Angel, i.e. St. Michael, who is here asked to cease looking towards Spain and to turn his gaze to the seas around him, where the shipwrecked Lycidas lies. Some would take 'Angel' as addressed to Lycidas, who would then be regarded as a glorified spirit looking down upon his weeping friends: that this is not the meaning is evident from the language of l. 164.

ruth, pity: see note, Son. ix. 8.

164. dolphins, sea-animals; here alluded to because Arion, an ancient Greek bard, when thrown overboard by sailors on a voyage to Corinth, was supported on the backs of dolphins whom he had charmed by his music.

waft, a word generally applied to winds. sometimes also to water, is here used of the dolphins to signify their swift passage through the sea.

165. The poem here becomes a strain of joy (see Analysis), which may be compared with that which closes Milton's other famous elegy on the death of Charles Diodati two years after Lycidas was composed. The following extract from the latter (Cowper's translation) will partly enable the student to compare the two pieces—

"Cease then my tears to flow !

Away with grief, on Damon ill bestowed !

Who, pure himself, has found a pure abode,

Has passed the showery arch, henceforth resides

With saints and heroes, and from flowing tides

Quaffs copious immortality and joy. . . .

Thy brows encircled with a radiant band,

And the green palm-branch waving in thy hand,

Thou in immortal nuptials shalt rejoice,
 And join with seraphs thy according voice,
 Where rapture reigns, and the ecstatic lyre
 Guides the blest orgies of the blazing quire.

woful, also spelt 'woeful.'

166. your sorrow, object of your sorrow; by synecdoche the name of a passion or emotion is often put for the object that inspires it, e.g. joy, pride, delight, care, hope, etc.

is not dead, i.e. he lives in Paradise.

167. watery floor, the surface of the sea: comp. "level brine, l. 98, and the Lat. aequor (a level surface) applied to the sea. Shakespeare calls the sky the "floor of heaven."

168. day-star, the sun, which, to one looking seaward, seems to sink, at setting, into the ocean. Comp. Com. 95—

"And the gilded car of day
 His glowing axle doth allay
 In the steep Atlantic stream."

169. anon, after a short time, i.e. at sunrise. Comp. L'Alleg. 131.

170. tricks; here used transitively in the sense of 'to display' see Il Pens. 123, note.

new-spangled ore, bright golden rays. 'Ore' = metal, the newly-risen sun being like a ball or disc of gold. 'Spangled' = sparkling: a spangle is strictly a small plate of shining metal used as an ornament, and hence in poetry it is common to speak of the stars as spangles, and of the sky as 'spangled with stars. Comp. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew, iv. 5.: see also Par. Lost, xi. 128.

172. So. The meaning is, 'As the sun sinks into the sea in the evening but rises again in the morning with renewed beauty, so Lycidas sank low into the sea, but rose again through the saving power of Christ, to take his place in Paradise.

'Sunk' = sank: see l. 102, note.

173. the dear might of Him, etc. = the power of that dear Saviour over whom the waves of the sea had no power. Milton thus appropriately illustrates Christ's power by a reference to that one of his miracles which shows his rule over the waters. See Matt. xiv. 22.

'Walked': here used transitively; comp. Il Pens. 156.

174. Where, i.e. 'mounted high (to that place) where,' etc.

along, a preposition governing 'groves' and 'streams.'

175. His locks that were wet with the sea ooze he washes with the pure nectar of heaven.

'Oozy,' slimy; 'ooze' is the soft mud found at the bottom of the sea. 'To ooze' is to flow gently, as ooze would do.

'Nectar,' the drink of the gods: in Death of a Fair Infant, Milton speaks of the "nectared head" of a goddess, and in Par. Lost, he tells us that there is a "nectarous humour" in the veins of the angels.

✓ 176. unexpressive nuptial song, i.e. inexpressible marriage song: see Rev. xix. 9, where all true believers are spoken of as bidden to the marriage feast of the Lamb of God. In the two preceding lines the language of Lycidus is that of classical mythology; in this line and the six following, the imagery is Christian; and then the poet reverts to mythology. "We might say that these things are ill-fitted to each other. So they would be, were not the art so fine and the poetry so overmastering; were they not fused together by genius into a whole so that the unfitness itself becomes fascination." (Brooke.)

'Unexpressive': both Shakespeare and Milton use adjectives with the termination -ive where we now use -ible or -able. Comp. incomprehensive, plausible, insuppressible, etc., occurring in Shakespeare. For the prefix -un see note on l. 64 above. The word 'unexpressive' has therefore, in modern English, become in-express-ible. 'Nuptial' is from Lat. nubere, to marry; comp. 'connubial.'

177. For the order of the words comp. L'Alleg. 40.

178. 'There all the saints above entertain him.'

179. sweet societies. What Milton here calls 'sweet societies of angels, he calls (in Par. Lost, xi. 80) 'fellowships of joy. Milton believed in a complete angelic system, with a most elaborate division into orders and degrees of rank—a system widely recognised in mediæval Christian tradition. In Par. Los he makes large use of this belief; in this poem it is merely hinted at.

181. The language of this line is taken from the Scriptures see Isaiah, xxv. 8, and Rev. vii. 7, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

for ever, once and for all.

182. This line is to be compared with line 165.

183. the Genius of the shore: see Arc. 25, 26; Il Pens. 154. It is common in Latin poetry to represent a drowned person as becoming the genius or guardian spirit of the locality where he met his fate, his office being to prevent future voyagers from a like disaster; hence Milton says, "(thou) shalt be good (i.e. propitious) to all that wander," etc. The Latin bonus occurs in the sense of 'propitious,' Virgil's Ecl. v. 64.

184. In thy large recompense, i.e. as a great recompense to thee. "The use of the possessive pronouns and of the inflected possessive case of nouns and pronouns was, until a comparatively recent period, very much more extensive than at present, and they were employed in many cases where the preposition with the objective now takes its place" (Marsh).

185. wander in that perilous flood, i.e. sail over that dangerous sea.

186. The epilogue begins here (see analysis): its separateness from the rest of the poem is indicated by the fact that in it Milton lays aside his "oaten flute" and resumes his own personality, and by the metrical and rhyming structure of the eight lines of which it consists. It is, in fact, a stanza in Ottava Rima, the arrangement of rhymes being abababcc.

uncouth: see note, L'Alleg. 5.

187. with sandals gray, i.e. at the gray dawn. Comp. "gray-hooded even," Com. 188. The shepherd had begun to sing at daybreak, but in his eagerness he had continued till evening.

188. He touched the tender stops of various quills, i.e. throughout his song he had passed through various moods and had sung in various metres. 'Quill' is here used in its primary sense, = a reed, which Milton has already called 'oaten pipe': the application of this word to the feather of a bird is secondary. The 'stops' of a reed or flute are the small holes over which the fingers of the player are placed, also called vent-holes or (as in Shakespeare) 'ventages': comp. Com. 345, "pastoral reed with oaten stops." The epithet 'tender' is here transferred from the music itself to the stops, from the effect to the cause.

189. thought, care: comp. Matt. vi. 25, "Take no thought for your life," etc.

Doric lay, pastoral song, so called because Theocritus, Bion, and Moschus wrote their pastorals in the Doric dialect of the Greek tongue: see note on L'Alleg. 136.

190. 'The sun, being low, had lengthened the shadows of the hills.' Comp. Virgil, Ecl. i. 83.

191. was dropt, had dropt: see note, l. 97, and Son. ii. 6.

192. twitched, plucked tightly around him.

his mantle blue. The colour is that of a shepherd's dress, hence the allusion. It is very improbable that any allegorical sense is intended.

193. To-morrow, etc.: comp. the Purple Island, by Fletcher—

"Home, then, my lambs: the falling drops eschew:
To-morrow shall ye feast in pastures new."

SONNETS.

Milton's sonnets are of interest not merely from the circumstances of their composition and from the subjects of which they treat, but also from the fact that they are, in metrical structure, closer to the Italian type than those of any other English poet. The sonnet came to us originally from Italy, and hence Milton speaks of it as the Petrarchian stanza. It is a poem of fourteen decasyllabic lines, the first eight forming the octave, and the remaining six the sestet. The octave consists of two quatrains, and has its rhymes arranged thus—a b b a, a b b a. In the strict Italian type a pause or break in the thought occurs at the end of the octave, but this rule has many exceptions. The rhymes of the sestet are less strictly governed by rule, and the first three forms employed by Milton (see subjoined metrical table) are all common in the sonnets of Petrarch, Dante, Tasso, and Vittoria Colonna. Ariosto chiefly follows what is here called Milton's first form. In the Italian sonnet a final rhyming couplet was allowable, but Milton uses it only once (Son. xvi.): in Spenser and Shakespeare, on the other hand, this rhyming couplet is always present. The sonnet must be absolutely complete in itself and must be dignified and full of strength. It must be the direct expression of some real emotion, of some incident that has stirred the poet's soul. Judged by these requirements Milton's sonnets are seen to be worthy of the form in which they are cast; they are not fanciful expressions of some simulated feeling, but are straightforward, majestic and impassioned. Wordsworth might well say of the Sonnet that, in Milton's hands, "the thing became a trumpet, whence he blew soul-animating strains,—alas! too few!"

SONNET I.

The title is printed in brackets in the text, because it is not found in either of the two editions (1645 and 1673) superintended by Milton himself: comp. also Son. ii., ix., xix., xx., xxi., xxii., xxiii. There is no means of dating this sonnet precisely, but it is placed first by Milton himself, and must be referred either to the close of the Cambridge period or to the beginning of the Horton period (i.e. about 1631). It shows that Milton had, even in his first efforts at sonnet-writing, resolved to adhere to Italian metrical models.

1. O, nightingale. Milton's fondness for this bird shows itself in Il Pens. 61-64, Comus, 234, 566, and elsewhere. It arrives in England about the middle of April. Poets generally (as here) refer to it by the feminine gender, perhaps on account of the story of Philomela (see Il Pens. 61), but it is the male that is the song-bird: he sings on till the young are hatched in the month of June.

yon bloomy spray. For 'yon' see note, Il Pens. 52. 'Bloomy' strictly denotes 'blooming,' i.e. covered with blossom, but if it is objected that the trees are not in blossom in April, it may be interpreted to mean 'covered with buds,' i.e. about to burst into blossom. For the termination y (=A.S. ig), comp. 'massy,' Il Pens. 158. 'Spray' = sprig (which is radically the same word), implies the breaking up of a branch into a number of twigs, just as 'twig' itself (from the same root as two) implies a small shoot branching off from a larger one.

2. Warblest, art accustomed to warble. The present here denotes not what is actually taking place, but what frequently takes place.

when all the woods are still, when all the other songsters have ceased: comp. Il Pens. 61.

3. fresh hope, i.e. renewed hope.

4. the jolly hours lead, etc., i.e. 'while the bright hours herald the approach of the happy month of May.' The Horæ (or Hours) of classical mythology were regarded as the goddesses of the Seasons, whose course was described as the dance of the Horae. The Hora of Spring accompanied Persephone every year on her ascent from the lower world, and the expression "The chamber of the Horae opens" is equivalent to "The Spring is coming." The attributes of Spring—flowers, fragrance, and the bloom of youth—are accordingly transferred to the Horae.

'Jolly'; the original sense is 'festive,' and this would suit the sense here; in Com. 986, Milton calls the Hours 'rosy-bosomed.' In Chaucer, Spenser and others, 'jolly' is used in the sense of the French joli, = pleasing, pretty; in modern English it means merry, and implies boisterous mirth.

propitious May. May is here called propitious (i.e. favourable) because it was regarded as favourable to love, "whose month is ever May," L. L. L. iv. 3. The literal sense of 'propitious' is 'flying forward,' a meaning which points back to the time when the Romans judged omens to be good or bad according to the flight of birds.

5. liquid, smooth-flowing, sweet. 'Notes' is nominative to 'portend.'

the eye of day. The song of the nightingale is so sweet that it lulls the day to sleep. Comp. Lyc. 26, Com. 978;

"Where day never shuts his eye."

6. First heard. This line forms a participial clause, doing duty for a temporal clause introduced by 'when.' In Latin this construction is frequent.

before the shallow cuckoo's bill, i.e. before the unmusical notes of the cuckoo are heard. 'Shallow' here expresses contempt, as in Son. xiii. 12; in the same way we speak of sounds as being thin or weak. 'Bill' = song; by synecdoche the source of the song is put for the song itself. The name of the bird is said to be derived from the sound made by it: comp. Lat. cuculus, Sansk. kokila, both imitative.

7. Portend, foretell. The nightingale and the cuckoo were regarded as rival heralds of Spring. It was a superstition that to hear the cuckoo before the nightingale betokened unhappiness for lovers.

8. have linked; subjunctive mood, as 'foretell,' l. 10.

amorous power, power over the affairs of lovers (Lat. amor = love). This is an instance of transference of attribute: 'amorous' can strictly be applied only to persons.

9. timely sing, sing in good time (i.e. be not too late as you have hitherto been). 'Timely' is now used as an adjective, here it is an adverb: comp. Com. 689, 970; 'timely rest' (adj.), 'timely tried' (adv.).

bird of hate. 'Of hate' is here used passively = hated. The cuckoo is feared and hated by the smaller birds.

11. As, since; here introduces an explanatory clause, giving the cause of the poet's request.

too late For my relief, i.e. too late to be able to relieve me. An adjective preceded by the adverb too is often followed by a gerundial infinitive or a prepositional phrase, which is equivalent to an adverb and modifies the adjective. The prepositional phrase corresponds to the Lat. ad with the gerund.

12. yet hadst, etc.; i.e. yet thou hadst no reason why (thou shouldst have sung so late). The word 'yet' (= nevertheless) introduces an independent clause, and marks a contrast. 'Why,' along with the understood clause, is an attribute to 'reason.'

13. call, name: is here singular and in subjunctive mood. Its two objects are 'thee' and 'mate.'

his mate: the use of the pronoun his implies reference to the nightingale by the feminine gender, as usual; but it makes Muse masculine, which is unusual: comp. Il Pens. 47, Lyc. 19.

14. Both them. In modern English both, when used with pronouns, is treated either as an adjective or as a substantive: in the former case it follows the pronoun, e.g. them both; in the latter case 'of' is inserted, e.g. both of them. The latter use is, strictly speaking, not logical, for 'of' gives a partitive meaning, as in 'six of them,' 'a few of them': whereas in 'both of them' there is no reference to a part, but to the whole. This is avoided in Latin, where 'all of us' is 'we all' (nos omnes), 'how many of you were there?' is 'you how many etc.,' (quot estis?). When both is used with nouns there is greater choice of arrangement, e.g. 'both brothers,' 'both of the brothers,' 'both the brothers,' and even 'brothers both.'

The last two lines form an adverbial clause, giving a reason for the statement made in line 12.

SONNET II.

Milton was twenty-three years old on the 9th of December, 1631: this fixes the date of the sonnet, the last he wrote while at Cambridge. By the time he took his degree of M.A. (1632) he had given up all intention of entering the Church, and on account of this decision a friend ventured to remonstrate with him. The reply was a letter accompanied by this sonnet, which Milton described as a Petrarchian stanza: in fact, nearly seventy of Petrarch's sonnets have the same metrical structure as this has.

1. How soon, exclamatory, not interrogative.

subtle thief of youth. Time is so called because youth passes away imperceptibly: with this phrase compare Young's "procrastination is the thief of time," and Pope's "Time, the thief of life," etc.

2. Stolen: the verb is 'hath stolen,' and its object is 'year.' 'Steal' here implies that the twenty-third year had been completed, not, as some think, that it had begun.

three-and-twentieth: this is a compound ordinal numeral: in such cases it is the final member of the compound that takes the ordinal suffix; comp. 'twenty-third' with 'three-and-twentieth.'

3. full career: comp. the use of 'full' in the phrases 'at full speed,' 'in full swing,' etc.

4. no bud or blossom shew'th, i.e. gives no sign of inward fitness. Comp. 2 Hen. IV. i. 3—

"As in an early spring
We see the appearing buds which to prove fruit
Hope gives not so much warrant as despair
That frosts will bite them.

Here shew'th rhymes with youth: comp. Il Pens. 171.

5. my semblance, etc., i.e. 'perhaps my outward appearance belies the fact that I have arrived so near manhood, and maturity of mind may be much less evident in me than in some more fortunate natures.' Milton here alludes to his youthful face and figure, which at Cambridge led to his being called 'the lady of Christ's.'

6. That I ... near: in apposition to 'truth.'

7. I am arrived. It is more usual in modern English to say 'have arrived.' With some intransitive verbs of motion (e.g. to go, come, arrive, enter) either of the auxiliaries be and have is used; in Elizabethan writers both forms are common: thus 'I am arrived' expresses my present state, while 'I have arrived' expresses the activity which preceded the present state. This distinction of meaning is not now strictly observed, and the auxiliary 'have' is in general use. (See Abbott's Shak. Gram.)

8. timely-happy, fortunate with regard to time. See note, Son. i. 9.

endu'th=endoweth, of which it is an older spelling. It is from Fr. endouer (Lat. in-dotare), to give a gift to: cognate words are dowry, endowment. It has no connection with indue, which means 'to clothe with' (Lat. in-duere). The words are often confused.

9. be it less or more. In this line 'or' occurs three times, there being two pairs of alternatives—'whether it be less or more,' and 'whether it be soon or slow.' In the first case 'whether' is understood; in the second 'or' = whether (a cognate word).

10. It shall be still, etc., it shall in any case be strictly in proportion to the lot for which Heaven intends me. We have here Milton's deliberate statement of his intention to become a great poet. The word 'shall' is emphatic. 'It' = 'ripeness.'

even, equal, in proportion to: an adjective.

11. mean, humble (Ger. gemein, common). The adjective mean = middle is a totally different word, being from Lat. medius.

12. will of Heaven, sc. 'leads me.'

13. All is, etc. This may mean 'all is even,' or 'all that concerns me'; 'my first consideration is to use my powers as one who is conscious that God constantly sees and judges my work.'

14. Task-Master's eye. This is in allusion to the parable of the labourers in the vineyard (Matt. xx.); in the letter which accompanied this sonnet Milton says, "Those that were latest lost nothing when the Master of the vineyard came to give every man his hire." Compare the closing lines of Son. xix.

Sonnets iii. to vii. are in Italian.

SONNET VIII.

The title is Milton's own. This sonnet is inspired by his high conception of the poet's task and of the power that lies in the name of a great poet to avert disaster and to requite those who honour the Muses. It was written in November, 1642. The battle of Edgehill was fought in October of that year, and the royal army then marched to attack London. This was the 'assault' expected, and Milton, having been an active pamphleteer on the side of the Parliament, might naturally have feared that his house would not escape the Royalists if they succeeded in entering the city. The 'assault' never took place, for the royal army retreated when the parliamentary army, under the Earl of Essex, moved out to meet it.

1. Colonel is here a trisyllable, though usually a dissyllable. It is from the Ital. colonello, the leader of the little column (i.e. at the head of a regiment). It has no connection with Lat. corona, a crown. (Skeat.)

Knight in Arms, a title conferred on persons of high rank as a recognition of military prowess. See Shak. Rich. II. i. 3.

2. Whose chance. This is a peculiar construction, which may be resolved into 'whose lot it may be to seize.' It implies doubt, not that the house will be seized, but as to the particular officer that may seize it.

these defenceless doors. The word 'these' is used because the sonnet was written as if to be affixed to the door of Milton's house; it would thus be a mute appeal to the besiegers.

3. ever, at any time, on any occasion.

4. him within, etc., 'protect from injury him that is within.'

5. He can requite thee, i.e. the poet can reward you by rendering you famous "in his immortal verse." Comp. Shakespeare's Son. 81—

"Your monument shall be my gentle verse."

'Requite' is literally the same as 'repay,' from re and quit=freed or discharged.

charms, magic verses: comp. Il Pens. 83 and note.

6. call, 'bring down or bestow fame on such honourable acts as these,' viz. guarding the poet's house and protecting him.

8. Whatever clime. These words are in apposition to 'lands and seas.' 'Clime' (comp. Com. 977) is radically the same as 'climate,' and here used in its original sense=a region of the earth. 'Climate' has now the secondary sense of 'atmospheric conditions.'

The meaning of the line is, 'Wherever the sun shines.'

9. the Muses' bower, poetical language for 'the poet's house'; comp. Lyc. 19.

10. Emathian conqueror, Alexander the Great (the Sikander of Indian history), king of Macedonia, of which Emathia was a province.

bid spare: see note Arc. 13.

11. house of Pindarus. Pindar (B.C. 522-442), the greatest lyric poet of Greece, was said to have been born at Thebes; this city had been subdued by Philip of Macedonia, the father of Alexander the Great, on whose accession the Thebes attempted to recover their liberty (B.C. 336). Alexander, to punish them, destroyed the whole city with the exception of the temples and Pindar's house.

temple and tower. Some legends affirm that the temples were not destroyed.

12. repeated air, i.e. the air or chorus having been recited. The adjective here is not a mere attribute, but has the force of an adverbial clause giving the circumstances under which the event took place: 'the air had the power to save Athens, because it was repeated.' Comp. the Latin use of participles and of clauses with qui and quippe qui in such cases.

13. sad Electra's poet, Euripides (B.C. 480-406), here called "sad Electra's poet" because in one of his tragedies he deals with the history and character of Electra, the daughter of Agamemnon, and because it was a chorus from this tragedy that moved the Spartans to spare Athens. Euripides (like Homer and Ovid) was one of Milton's favourite classical authors.

The adjective 'sad' is sometimes taken as qualifying 'poet,' Euripides having been of a serious and austere disposition: such an arrangement of the words would not be allowable in modern English, though there would be no ambiguity in Latin. The more obvious reading is to refer 'sad' to Electra, who, owing to the murder of her father by her mother, often bewails her sad lot.

14. To save, etc. The Spartans took Athens, B.C. 404, and deliberated as to how the city should be dealt with. It was proposed by some to destroy it utterly, but a Phocian singer having recited part of a chorus from the Electra of Euripides while the decision was still in suspense, the hearers were so moved that they agreed it would be dishonourable to destroy a city that had given birth to such great poets.

SONNET IX.

This sonnet, written probably in 1644, has no title in Milton's editions; and we have no certain clue to the name of the lady addressed in it.

1. Lady, that, etc. The relative 'that' here introduces an essential characteristic: the full nominative of address occupies the first four lines of the sonnet, the principal verb (hast chosen) occurring in l. 6. The biblical phraseology of Sonnets ix. and xiv., both addressed to virtuous women, should be noted. Mr. Smart conjectures that the two women were mother and daughter. Evidently the young lady had been a target for spiteful criticism, and Milton seeks to comfort her.

prime. The words 'prime' and 'earliest' together emphasise the early choice made by the lady (Lat. primus, first). 'Earliest,' very early, the superlative being merely intensive (as often in Latin): see note, Il Pens. 12.

2. the broad way and the green, the broad and green way. This sonnet is full of Biblical imagery: comp. Matt. vii. 13, "Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction." By calling it green as well as broad, Milton signifies that the way of the sinful is not merely easy to travel, but attractive.

When two adjectives refer to one object, this arrangement of words cannot be imitated: e.g. 'the broad way and the green' would, in ordinary prose, imply that there were two ways, one green, the other broad.

3. with those few, i.e. in company with the few referred to in Matt. vii. 14, "Narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." 'Those' is therefore used demonstratively.

art eminently seen, i.e. thou art conspicuous. 'Eminently' is here an essential part of the predicate; 'to be seen eminently' = 'to be seen to be eminent' (Lat. eminens, standing out).

4. That labour, etc. Comp. Hamlet, i. 3—

"Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven,
While, like a puff'd and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads."

5. The better part, etc. : i.e. thou hast chosen, as Mary and Ruth did, the better part, viz., devotion to God and heavenly things. The poet here likens the lady to two women mentioned in the Scriptures as having made a similar choice. Mary and Martha were two sisters, of whom the latter was troubled about worldly affairs, while the former had "chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her" (Luke x.). Similarly Ruth, the Moabitess, refused to leave her mother-in-law, saying: "Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God" (Ruth, i.).

6. overween, think arrogantly, think too highly of themselves. The word, though frequent in Milton, is now nearly obsolete except as a participial adjective, 'overweening' = conceited, arrogant. It is from the verb ween, to suppose, think; now obsolete except in the parenthetical clause 'I ween' (A.S. wenan, to imagine).

7. fret their spleen, become spiteful or ill-humoured. The old theory of "humours" placed the seat of anger and ill-humoured melancholy in the spleen, a spongy gland situated above the kidneys; hence a spiteful person is said 'to have the spleen' or 'to be splenetic.' Shakespeare uses the adjectives 'splenitive,' 'spleenful,' and 'spleeny.' So in Latin stomachus was used for ill-temper: comp. 'melancholy,' L'Alleg. l. 'Fret,' to excite, literally 'to eat away' (A.S. fretan).

8. No anger find in thee, i.e. they do not excite your anger, but your pity.

pity and ruth. 'Ruth' = pity. It is not uncommon to find in poetry two nouns of the same sense thus connected by and: this is sometimes to give emphasis, and sometimes it points to a usage rendered necessary when the Normans settled in England. It "sprang out of the mutual necessity felt by two races of people and two classes of society to make themselves intelligible the one to the other. It is, in fact, a putting of colloquial formulae to do the duty of a French-English and an English-French vocabulary." 'Pity' is the old Fr. pit  , from Lat. pietas

(from which our word piety is directly derived). 'Ruth,' now obsolete (except in poetry and in the adjective ruthless and its derivatives), is from the verb rue, to be sorry for (A.S. hreowan).

The word here rhymes with Ruth in l. 5, an instance of what is called an identical rhyme, which is not now tolerated in English poetry. Such rhymes occur occasionally in Chaucer and Spenser, and twice in Shakespeare.

'Pity' and 'ruth' are objects of the verb 'find.'

9. Thy care is fixed : comp. Psalm cxii. 7.

zealously : see note, L'Alleg. 6.

10. odorous lamp. The lady is here likened to the five wise virgins of Scripture (Matt. xxv.) who, unlike their foolish sisters, were careful to take oil in their vessels with their lamps when they went out to meet the Bridegroom, and so were able to gain admittance to the marriage feast. 'Odorous' = fragrant.

deeds of light, i.e. good deeds. Comp. M. of Venice : "So shines a good deed in a naughty world"; also Matt. v. 18, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works."

11. hope, etc. Comp. Romans, v. 5, "Hope maketh not ashamed."

be sure Thou, etc., i.e. be sure (that) thou hast gained.

12. Bridegroom, in allusion to the parable of the Ten Virgins (see l. 10). The word is from A.S. bryd, bride, and guma, man : the r in 'groom' is due to confusion with A.S. grome, a groom, which is a totally different word.

feastful, festive. 'Feastful,' a hybrid word, is now obsolete, being one of a large number of adjectives formed by means of the word full and now disused, e.g. charming, despairful, excessful, etc. 'Feast' is from Lat. festus, joyful; there are two derived adjectives in common use—festal and festive, of which the terminations are of Latin origin.

13. mid-hour of night, hour of midnight.

14. Hast gained. The sequence of tenses here should be observed. In the dependent clause we have a present (passes), and in the principal clause a perfect (hast gained) : the sense is, 'at the moment the bridegroom passes to bliss, at that very moment thy entrance is complete (i.e. has been gained).'

SONNET X.

This was written in 1644 or 1645 ; it is the latest of the sonnets printed in the edition of 1645. Phillips, the nephew and biographer of Milton, relates that during the time the poet was deserted by his first wife he "made it his chief diversion now and then of an evening to visit the Lady Margaret Ley. This lady, being a woman of great wit and ingenuity, had a particular honour for him, and took much delight in his company, as likewise Captain Hobson, her husband, a very accomplished gentleman." Her father was created Earl of Marlborough by Charles I.

1. that good Earl: James Ley, born 1552, was made Lord High Treasurer of England in 1624, and Lord President of the Council in 1627. Both these offices are alluded to in the sonnet. "He had been removed from the High Treasurership to the less laborious office of President of the Council, ostensibly on account of his old age, but really, it was thought, because he was not sufficiently compliant with the policy of Charles and Buckingham. He died in March, 1628-9, immediately after the dissolution of Charles's Third Parliament; and, as the sonnet hints, his death was believed to have been hastened by political anxiety at that crisis" (Masson).

The construction 'Daughter to that good Earl' should be noticed; the preposition of is commonly used.

once President. 'Once' is here an adverbial adjunct to 'President,' for when a noun stands in attributive relation to another noun, it may be modified by adverbs. It is not necessary, therefore, to explain 'once' as an adverb modifying 'was' understood.

2. her, i.e. England's.

3. in both unstained, i.e. not having, in either of these offices, sullied his reputation by taking bribes. 'Fee' is from the A.S. feoh, cattle, property, now used of the price paid for services: see note, Son. xii. 7.

4. more in himself content. This does not mean that he resigned of his own accord, but that, "when dismissed, he went willingly": the construction is, "(being) more content in himself (than in the enjoyment of office)."

5. sad breaking. There is here a play upon the word 'break' applied in l. 5 to the dissolving of Parliament, and in l. 6 to the effects of this upon the old Earl. In the former sense we speak of the breaking up of an assembly, and in the latter of a person's spirits or health being broken. Milton calls the dissolution of Charles's third Parliament a sad one, because it showed that the King had entered upon that line of conduct which led to the Civil War. The demonstrative that implies that the Parliament referred to is too well known to need further mention: comp. l. 8.

6. as that dishonest victory, etc., i.e. in the same way as the victory at Chaeronea broke the heart of Isocrates. The word 'dishonest' is here used in the sense of Lat. inhonestus = dishonourable: in the same way our word 'honesty' has not the high sense of the Lat. honestas = all that is honourable. Milton calls the victory dishonest because it was 'fatal to liberty': in it Philip of Macedon defeated the combined Athenian and Theban forces, B.C. 338, Greece thus losing her independence. Chaeronea was a city of Bœotia.

8. with report. 'With' = by means of. The use of the instrumental with is not now so common as in earlier English, and is never used to denote the agent. In Chaucer we find "slain with (= by) cursed Jews."

that old man eloquent; Isocrates, one of the most famous of Greek orators, who, at the age of ninety-nine, died four days after hearing the report of the disaster at the Chaeronea. So the good Earl of the sonnet died four days after the dissolution of Parliament.

9. Though later born, etc., "though I was born too late to have known your father at his best, yet, methinks, I am able from seeing you to judge what he was like." Milton does not mean that he was born after the Earl's death, for the Earl died twenty years after Milton's birth.

Than in this line is a conjunction introducing an elliptical clause depending on later. It is difficult to give a satisfactory syntactical explanation of such clauses: we may expand it into, 'Though I was born later than (I should have been in order) to have known': see note on than, Son. xvii. 2.

10. by you, through or by means of you.

11. methinks, it seems to me. Here me is the dative, and thinks is an impersonal verb (A.S. thincan, to appear), quite distinct from the verb 'I think,' which is from the A.S. thencan, to cause to appear. For a similar relation compare drink with drench (= to cause to drink).

yet. In this line yet = up to the present time; in the previous line yet = nevertheless.

13. That all both judge you. That here introduces a clause of consequence in adverbial relation to well, and co-ordinate with so: comp. "He spoke so fast that I could not understand."

Both in this line is strangely placed: the ordinary form would be: 'All judge you both to relate them (i.e. your father's virtues) truly, and to possess them.' The co-ordinate words are relate and possess: the one is preceded by both, the other by and.

SONNET XI.

Sonnets xi. and xii. are generally known as the Divorce sonnets; they were probably written after the publication of the first edition of the Minor Poems in 1645. These two sonnets breathe the air of controversy, into which Milton had thrown himself since 1641. His desertion by his first wife in 1643 had turned his attention to the question of Divorce, and in August of that year he published a pamphlet entitled The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce Restored. This was followed by other three tracts, viz. The Judgment of Martin Bucer concerning Divorce; Tetrachordon, or Expositions upon the four chief places in Scripture which treat of Marriage; and Colasterion: a Reply to a Nameless Answer against the Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce. Owing to these pamphlets Milton was regarded by many as the propounder of doctrines that were calculated to undermine morality and destroy the beauty of social and family life. The Presbyterian divines were especially severe on him, and from this time he was generally regarded as having gone over to the ranks of the Independents. His wife returned to him in 1645, probably before these two sonnets were written, so that he was the better able to throw ridicule upon those who had regarded him as lightly estimating the sanctity of married life.

1. writ, written. All verbs of the strong conjugation originally formed their past participles in en: owing however to a tendency (very common in Elizabethan writers) to drop the suffix, many strong verbs have now two forms of the past participle, e.g. chid, chidden; bid, bidden; bit, bitten; writ, written; while others have lost the form in en altogether, e.g. spit.

Tetrachordon. This Greek word means 'four-stringed': applied to this pamphlet because it expounded four passages of Scripture, Gen. i. and ii., Deut. xxiv., Matt. v. and xix., 1 Cor. vii.

2. woven close, etc. Here Milton characterises his own prose style, and indicates correctly its most striking features, viz. close reasoning and involved yet scholarly syntax, due largely to his use of Latin constructions. The 'matter' refers to his arguments, the 'form' to their arrangement, and the 'style' to the diction employed.

both: strictly speaking, both ... and should couple only two notions, but Milton sometimes uses them to join more than two: comp. "The God that made both sky and earth and heaven."

3. The subject new. This may be taken absolutely: it is equivalent to an adverbial adjunct of cause, the meaning being,

"Because the subject was novel, the book attracted readers; but when the novelty wore off, it was little read." The punctuation would, however, justify the reading, "The subject (was) new": see note, Il Pens. 25.

walked the town awhile, i.e. was circulated and read throughout London for a time. 'Awhile' = for awhile (A.S. hwil = time).

4. Numbering, reckoning or estimating: the Lat. numero is sometimes used in this sense. The meaning is that the book, from the close texture of its thought and language, was a test of the reader's ability.

now seldom pored on, now seldom carefully read. In modern English we say 'to pore over,' and the passive form is not used. 'Pored on' rhymes with 'word on' and 'Gordon,' and line 7 ends in the middle of a word: we can only suppose that Milton takes these liberties because the sonnet is written in a jocular mood and with the intention of ridiculing his detractors. Yet Dr. Johnson afterwards quoted this piece as a representative specimen of an English sonnet!

6. some in file, i.e. some passers-by stand, one looking over another's shoulder, so long that, while they are trying to spell out the title, one could walk to Mile-End Green.

7. false, adverb: comp. 'close,' l. 2; and note, L'Alleg. 56.

Mile-End Green: "a locality in Whitechapel, about the distance which its name indicates from the central parts of the City of London, and the common terminus in Milton's time of a staid citizen's walk in that direction" (Masson).

8. Why, exclamatory. 'Is it harder?' is a rhetorical question meaning 'It is not harder to pronounce,' etc.

Gordon, Colkitto, Macdonnel, Galasp: these, which are in Milton's opinion as 'rugged' as the name of his own book, are all Scottish names, chosen because they were borne by men who had fought under the Marquis of Montrose on behalf of King Charles. George, Lord Gordon, had been slain in one of Montrose's battles; the other three names all refer to one person, viz. Alexander Macdonald, son of Colkittoch, son of Gillespie, son of Alexander, son of John Catnach. He was a powerful Highland chief, called Colkittoch because he was left-handed (from a Gaelic word). Galasp is Milton's corruption of Gillespie; there was a Scottish Presbyterian divine of this name, and the poet, as an Independent, may have meant to ridicule him as well as the Highlander.

10. rugged. Milton originally wrote 'barbarous,' then 'rough-hewn.'

our like mouths, i.e. mouths like ours. In the former phrase 'like' is an adjective, in the latter it has the force of a preposition. The explanation is that in Latin both would be translated by the adjective similis = like; e.g. similis sui is either 'like himself' or 'his like.'

grow sleek, lose their ruggedness.

11. made Quintilian stare. This line forms an attributive clause to 'names': see note on Son. ix. 1.

The names were so uncouth that Quintilian, the most famous of Roman rhetoricians, would have been astonished if he had heard them. Quintilian (A.D. 40-118) in his Institutes lays great stress on the judicious choice of words as an element of style; and there is no doubt that Milton also here expresses his own dislike of the guttural sounds and other peculiarities of the Scottish tongue.

12. like ours, as ours does. The words form an adverbial adjunct to l. 13; "thy age did not hate learning as ours does." If the words be taken as qualifying 'age,' they must be equivalent to 'unlike ours.'

Sir John Cheek (1514-1557). He was the first Professor of Greek at Cambridge, and afterwards tutor to Edward VI.; he is here mentioned probably because he had been a member of a commission appointed by Parliament to codify church law (including the law of divorce).

13. worse than toad or asp, i.e. worse than (it hates) toad or asp. Instead of 'hate worse' we ordinarily say 'hate more.' An asp is a venomous serpent.

14. taught'st. The verb to teach takes two objects: (1) 'Cambridge and King Edward,' and (2) 'Greek.'

SONNET XII.

This is a more indignant, and less jocular sonnet than the preceding.

1. to quit their clogs. 'Their' is used because it refers to the individuals living in the 'age' or period.

'Quit,' to give up, leave. The clogs or hindrances referred to are the restrictions upon divorce which Milton wished to see removed.

2. By, by means of.

the known rules, etc, i.e. "before divorce was restrained by ecclesiastical and other laws."

straight: see note, Univ. Carrier, II. 10, and L'Alleg. 69.

barbarous noise, i.e. clamour raised by vulgar and ignorant persons. Comp. the language of Par. Reg. iii. 49, "And what the people but a herd confused, A miscellaneous rabble," etc.

4. Of owls and cuckoos, etc. Milton purposely chooses animals whose cries are unmusical. One editor thinks Milton may have seen a painting in which the Spanish poet, Lope de Vega, is represented as calmly engaged in writing while surrounded by dogs, monkeys, etc. This sonnet shows, however, that Milton had not altogether preserved his own equanimity.

5. those hinds. The reference is to a fable told by Ovid in his Metamorphoses. When Leto, called Latona by the Romans, fled from the wrath of Juno, she took in her arms her 'twin-born progeny,' Apollo and Diana: being fatigued, she attempted to drink of the water of a small lake in Lycia, but was prevented by rustics who railed at her. In her distress she prayed for help, when the rustics were immediately turned into frogs. Comp. "the wise Latona," Arc. 20.

7. after, afterwards.

held the Sun and Moon in fee, Apollo being the god of the Sun, and Diana goddess of the Moon. Milton may here hint that he also, in spite of present detraction, hoped to make a great name for himself. 'To hold in fee' is to have absolute right. "An estate in fee simple is an unqualified inheritance in land unlimited in its duration as to descent." Comp. Wordsworth: "Once did she hold the gorgeous East in fee."

8. this is got, etc., i.e. this is the result of laying great thoughts before the vulgar. Comp. Matt. vii. 6, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast your pearls before the swine." 'Pearl' is here singular, because used generically.

9. bawl for freedom. Comp Tennyson:

"He that roars for Liberty

Faster binds a tyrant's power. — Vision of Sin.

11. Licence ... Liberty. In his Tetrachordon Milton wrote, "The Exposition here alleged is neither new nor licentious, as some now would persuade the commonalty, although it be nearer truth that nothing is more new than those teachers themselves, and nothing more licentious than some known to be, whose hypocrisy yet shames not to take offence at this doctrine (i.e. Liberty of Divorce) for Licence, whereas indeed they fear it would remove licence and leave them few companions."

12. who loves that (i.e. Liberty), etc.: in Tenure of Kings, Milton says, "None can love freedom heartily but good men; the rest love not freedom but licence." 'Who' is the subject of 'loves,' and the first clause 'who loves that' forms the subject of the second: it is now usual in such cases to use the compound relative whoever. The position of who at the beginning of the clause is due to the fact that it was originally used only as an interrogative pronoun.

13. rove. To shoot at rovers was to shoot without any particular aim. A 'rover' was a kind of arrow.

14. For all this waste. We may explain 'for' as = 'in spite of,' a meaning which it often has when followed by 'all.' 'All,' however, is not an adjective qualifying 'waste,' as is seen by expanding the phrase into 'For all that his waste of wealth could do.' Comp. Shakespeare, "For all he be a Roman"; and Nat. Ode, 73.

SONNET XIIIa.

This is a true sonnet of 14 lines, plus a tail or 'coda' of six lines: both parts are constructed according to the rules strictly observed by Italian writers. The tone of the piece is Anti-Presbyterian. Parliament had resolved in 1642 that government of the Church by archbishops and bishops was inconvenient, but the ordinance for the abolition of these 'prelates' was not passed by the Commons till October, 1646. The Presbyterians in Parliament then called for the suppression of all religious sects that were not in sympathy with the Presbyterian form of Church government. and Milton, as an Independent, taunts them with being "the new forcers of conscience." He is concerned, not with abusive attacks upon himself, but with the threat to religious liberty.

1. Prelate Lord, government of the Church by archbishops and bishops. A 'prelate' is strictly one placed over others (Lat. prae, before; latus, borne or brought).

2. stiff vows, inflexible decisions.

renounced his Liturgy. given up the Episcopal form of service. The Liturgy is the Book of Common Prayer, the reading of which was, in 1644, prohibited even in private families: severe penalties were incurred by those convicted under this law. 'Liturgy' is the Greek leitourgia, public service.

3. To seize, etc., i.e. in order that you might seize upon the endowments left vacant by some of the clergy. Milton was disgusted with the eagerness with which Presbyterian divines scrambled for vacant offices; it showed, as he thought, that their dislike of Episcopacy arose from envy, not abhorrence.

Plurality, the holding of more than one ecclesiastical living; one who does so is a pluralist. By the phrase "widowed whore" Milton refers to the Church as deprived of its prelates, and at the same time signifies that the holding of profitable offices by the clergy was distasteful to him. Comp. Son. xvi. and Lyc. 113-118.

5. ye ; see note, Arc. 40.

adjure the civil sword, i.e. solemnly call upon the civil power to aid you.

7. ride, override.

Classic Hierarchy, ecclesiastical government by Classes, The Class or Classis was the name given to the small Presbyterian court of each parish, and when Episcopacy was abolished, the Presbyterians wished to establish the Scottish system of a gradation of Church Courts. The Independents, on the contrary, thought that each congregation should be independent. 'Classic' is not now used in this primary sense ; in 'classic works,' 'Greek and Roman classics' it refers to literature of the highest class. 'Hierarchy,' sacred government (Greek hieros, sacred ; archein, to rule, seen in archbishop, archangel, etc.).

8. mere A. S. and Rutherford. Adam Stewart and Samuel Rutherford, two Scottish Presbyterian pamphleteers who vigorously opposed the Independents. The former published his pamphlets under the initials A. S. Rutherford was Professor of Divinity in the University of St. Andrews, and sat in the Westminster Assembly.

'Mere' (Lat. merus=unmixed, pure). In Elizabethan writers it often occurs in the sense of 'unadulterated.' Comp. Massinger's Virgin Martyr : "Thou art a mere I-am-an-O, I-am-an-as."

9. intent : see note Arc. 34. Trench points out that in earlier English 'to intend' meant 'to be actually and earnestly engaged in doing,' having no reference to the future as it now has.

Milton here takes the Apostle Paul as his type of a good preacher.

11. heretics. No word could better illustrate Milton's meaning ; it strictly denotes 'one who makes a choice,' and the poet held that every man must choose for himself what to believe. But the word has come to be applied in reproach to all who, in matters of religious belief, are in opposition to established and widely-accepted opinion. Such persons are also said to be 'heterodox,' which originally meant 'thinking differently from others' ; it now means 'differing from the majority,' and hence 'unsound' or 'objectionable.'

12. shallow Edwards : comp. Son. i. 6 and Arc. 41 : it expresses contempt. The Rev. Thomas Edwards, a London preacher, had attacked the Independents in a wretched pamphlet in which Milton is branded as a heretic for his views on divorce.

Scotch What-d've-call. The Scotchman here referred to is (Prof. Masson thinks) Robert Baillie, Professor of Divinity in the University of Glasgow, who had in 1645 attacked Milton for his opinions on divorce. The poet signifies that the attack had made little impression on him; he cannot even remember his opponent's name. He thus consigns him to oblivion.

14. packing. The meaning is: The meetings of the Westminster Assembly of Divines were more unfairly constituted by the exclusion of Independents than were those of the famous Council of Trent by the exclusion of Protestants. The Council was held at Trent in Austria-Hungary from 1545 to 1563 for the purpose of taking measures against the Reformation. We speak of a 'packed' meeting, a 'packed' jury, when endeavours are made to secure undue weight for one side of a question.

15. Here follows the 'coda' of the sonnet, forming one long adverbial clause of purpose or result.

16. with ... shears, i.e. by depriving you of your powers, and thus restoring the wholesome influence of toleration. For use of 'their' see Son. xii. 1.

17. Clip your phylacteries, etc., i.e. check your pharisaical pretensions to superior holiness, though not inflicting upon you that physical suffering which you would fain inflict upon 'heretics.'

The phylactery among the Jews was a slip of parchment inscribed with passages of Scripture, worn on the left arm or forehead: see Matt. xxiii. 5.

balk your ears, cheat your ears of their deserts by sparing them. The modern spelling is balk, to hinder, to cheat, used in such phrases as 'to be balked of one's design.' Milton hints at the fact that punishment by mutilation was not uncommon in his day: William Prynne, a Presbyterian, had had his nose and ears cut off for writing against Episcopacy and against the theatre in the time of Laud.

18. succour our just fears, relieve us from the fears that now, with good reason, possess us. 'Just' = justifiable. 'Succour' is here co-ordinate with 'clip.'

19. they, the Parliament.

in your charge, in the charge or accusation against you, when the party of toleration comes into power.

20. New Presbyterian ... old Priest. There is a double allusion here: (1) literally, the word priest is merely a contraction of the Greek presbyteros, elder; compare such pairs of words as diamond and adamant, fancy and phantasy, palsy and paralysis, slander and scandal: (2) the new Presbyterian was characterised by the same intolerant spirit as the Episcopalian or even as the Roman Catholic. The same allusion occurs in Areopagitica, written a year before this sonnet.

In Com. 322 and 748 Milton in a similar way connects the meaning of a word with its derivation.

writ large. Here also the two meanings appear, (1) Presbyter is a longer word than Priest, and (2) the name implied, to Milton, even greater intolerance. For 'writ' see Son. xi. 1.

SONNET XIII.

This first appeared as a recommendatory piece prefixed to Choice Psalms, put into Music for Three Voices, composed by Henry and William Lawes, Brothers, and Servants to His Majestie (1648). The title of the book shows that Henry Lawes was a Royalist, but this sonnet indicates that the poet had not allowed a difference of political opinions to weaken his friendship with the musician: a common love of music united the hearts of the two men. Moreover, the sonnet was a spontaneous tribute of regard, and had been written two years before Lawes' book was published. Lawes wrote the music of Arcades and Comus, and in the latter acted as Thyrsis and a Spirit.

1. Harry. This familiar form of address strikes the key-note of personal affection.

tuneful and well-measured song. Lawes was remarkable for his success in setting songs to music: "He communicated to verse an original and expressive melody; he exceeded his predecessors and contemporaries in a pathos and sentiment, a simplicity and propriety, an articulation and intelligibility which so naturally adapt themselves to the words of the poet." This extract explains the allusions to Lawes' music in the sonnet, e.g. 'tuneful,' 'well-measured,' 'just note and accent,' 'smooth air,' etc.

2. span, measure.

3. just note and accent, the melody being suited to the words, and the accent of the music corresponding to the accent of the language.

to scan With Midas' ears, i.e. to mismatch the melody and the words in a stupid manner. The verb 'taught' has here, as its second object, two infinitive clauses—'how to span' and 'not to scan.' See note, Son. xi. 14.

'Midas' ears,' i.e. ass's ears, denoting want of intelligence. This is in allusion to Midas, the King of Phrygia, who had been appointed judge in a musical contest between Apollo and Pan, and decided in favour of the latter. Apollo, indignant, changed his ears into those of an ass.

4. committing short and long, bringing together short and long syllables (which correspond roughly to what we call unaccented and accented syllables). Commit has here the sense of Lat. committere, to match, to bring together; it never really had this sense in English. Shakespeare uses 'commit' in the sense of 'transgress,' but this is not the meaning here.

5. exempts thee, etc., distinguishes you above all other musicians, redeems you from mediocrity. Comp. Horace, Ode i. 1, secernunt populo. 'Exempts' is singular, although the subject is 'worth and skill': these form one idea.

6. enough for Envy, etc., sufficient to cause the envious to turn pale. A similar idea occurs in Arc. 11-13; compare also "wrinkled care," "spare Fast," etc.

7. shalt be writ: thy name shall be handed down to posterity as that of the man who, etc. Compare the use of write in the phrase "Write him down a traitor." The Lat. scribo, to write, occurs in this sense—

"Scriberis Vario fortis et hostium Victor." Horace, Carm. I. i. 32.

8. couldst humour: couldst best suit your music to the English tongue. To humour a person is to adapt one's mood to his.

10. priest of Phoebus' quire, the leader of the choir of Phoebus (Apollo), the god of song and music. For 'quire,' see Il Pens. 162. Poets are often described as forming the choir of Apollo, Homer having been inspired by that god. 'Their,' in l. 11, refers to the poets forming his choir; Lawes having set to music short poems written by a large number of well-known authors.

11. happiest lines. 'Happy' = well-expressed. See Epit. on M. of W. 31, and comp. Lyc. 92.

hymn or story. The story referred to is that of Ariadne by Cartwright (1611-1643), set to music by Lawes.

12. Dante ... Casella. In his Purgatorio, canto ii., the poet Dante tells how, after emerging from Hell into Purgatory, he saw a vessel freighted with souls come to be purged of their sins and made fit for Paradise; among them he recognised one of his friends, Casella, a Florentine celebrated for his skill in music.

13. wooded to sing, pleaded with to sing. Dante asked Casella to sing some soothing air to console his spirit, and Casella complied by singing one of Dante's own songs.

14. Met ... Purgatory. Purgatory is called 'milder' by comparison with Hell: it was the place or state in which souls were purified or purged (Lat. purgare, to make pure). Dante tells how, on arrival at the gate of Purgatory, his forehead was marked with seven P's (= peccata, sins), one of which he would lose at every stage until he reached the river which divided Purgatory from Paradise.

'Met' is a participle qualifying 'whom,' and line 14 is equivalent to a subordinate clause. This is the Latin use of the participle.

SONNET XIV.

In his edition of Milton's sonnets Mr. Smart shows that the lady here addressed was Katharine Hutton, wife of George Thomason, a well-known London bookseller and publisher, who was an intimate friend of the poet. She was a woman of high character and wide knowledge.

1. parted from thee never, which never left you : never is emphatic.

2. ripened, brought to perfection. The verb is here used in an active sense. In Son. ii. 7, 'ripeness' is similarly used to denote moral growth.

to dwell with God : grammatically, denotes the extent of the action expressed by 'ripened.' Comp. Psalm xxiii. 6.

3. earthy load Of death. Human life is fleeting, and is here called a "load of death." Comp. Rom. vii. 24, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death"; also 1 Cor. xv. 49; see also note, Il Pens. 92.

4. from life doth sever : which separates us from eternal life. This mortal life is only so-called, the future and immortal life is true existence.

5. Thy Works and Alms. Comp. Acts, x. 4 : "Thy prayers and thine alms are gone up for a memorial before God."

The history of the word 'alms' illustrates how the form of a word may gradually come to disguise its origin. It is singular, not plural; and comes through Latin from the Greek eleēmosynē; this became in A.S. ælmæsse, then almes (two syllables), and finally alms. It has thus dwindled from six syllables to one.

good Endeavour, i.e. good deeds. In modern English it would mean well-meant or good efforts, whether successful or not. Here it means duty actually performed, being from Fr. devoir, duty, and the verbal prefix en.

6. nor in the grave, etc. : they were not forgotten after your death. Contrast this with the lines in Shak. Julius Caesar—

"The evil that men do lives after them,
The good is oft interred with their bones."

7. golden rod. Faith is here represented as pointing the way to heaven by means of a golden rod. In poetry saints are often represented as bearing wands or rods.

8. Followed : i.e. your good deeds followed you to heaven. 'For ever' is in this line an attributive adjunct to 'joy and bliss' = eternal.

9. knew them best Thy handmaids : knew them best to be thy handmaids = knew best that they were thy handmaids. A comparison of these two renderings will show that such verbs as 'know,' 'say,' 'think' may have as their object either a substantive accompanied by an infinitive or a substantive clause. The former is a Latin idiom, and is frequent in Milton; it is not so common in English as it was : e.g. in Anglo-Saxon we find 'They say him live,' i.e. 'They say that he is alive.'

11. that, etc. : so that, having been thus beautified, they flew up to God's presence.

12. speak. The earlier editions read 'spake,' but the present tense implies that the good deeds of the lady still plead for her at the judgment-seat.

themes : some editions read "in glorious themes." A 'theme' is a melodic strain or subject.

14. drink thy fill, etc. Comp. Psalm xxxvi., "Thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures," alluding to the waters of eternal life.

Grammatically, 'thy fill' may be taken to denote the extent of the action implied by the verb : some, however, regard it as a cognate object.

SONNET XV.

This, and Sonnets xvi., xvii., and xxii., were not published in Milton's lifetime : their references to Pre-Restoration politics did not allow of their publication in the second edition of the Minor Poems (1673). The siege of Colchester occurred during what is called the Second Civil War—a rising of the English and Scottish royalists on behalf of Charles I., then a prisoner in the Isle of Wight. The siege was conducted by the commander-in-chief of the Parliamentary armies, the third Lord Fairfax; and lasted more than two months (1648), during which time the inhabitants endured all the miseries of famine. Fairfax was a great general, a poet, and a man of culture, and Milton's sonnet is a tribute to his success on a particular occasion and to his high character.

1. name in arms, reputation as a soldier. The poet here speaks of Fairfax's European reputation as a commander in almost the same words as he speaks of his own reputation as a pamphleteer in Son. xxiii.

2. Filling. This is an example of syllepsis, the word 'filling' being applied to 'mouth' and to 'monarchs' in different senses.

3. her, Europe's.

amaze, amazement, consternation : an allusion to the effect that the doings of Parliament would have on the minds of other kings besides Charles.

The word 'amazement' is a hybrid, amaze (= in a maze) being Teutonic, and the suffix ment Romanic. Many words originally used both as verbs and nouns, exist only as verbs, e.g. amaze, revile, retire, all of which occur in Milton in both uses.

4. daunt ; see Il Pens. 137.5. virtue, valour : see Il Pens. 113, note.

ever brings Victory home. "Though the credit of the parliamentary triumph has been popularly attached to the greater name of Cromwell, it was to Fairfax that it was in great measure due." (Pattison.)

6. new rebellions. This sonnet having been written during the siege of Colchester, the poet must be referring to the various outbreaks which together form the Second Civil War—in Wales, Kent, Essex, and the west of England.

7. Their Hydra heads. It was one of the labours of Hercules to destroy the monster Hydra ; it had nine heads, and as each head was struck off two new ones grew forth in its place : hence the epithet 'hydra-headed' applied to a rebellion, an epidemic, or other evil that seems to gain strength from each endeavour to repress it.

false North : the meaning is, 'Though Scotland, having broken her alliance with the Parliament, renews the war on the pretext that the English have failed to observe the Solemn League and Covenant.' This is Milton's view of the matter.

8. to imp their serpent wings, i.e. 'to strengthen the English royalists, as a hawk's broken wing is imped or strengthened by the insertion of new feathers.' Euripides speaks of the monster Hydra as a winged serpent.

An 'imp' is properly a graft, or shoot, and was applied in a good sense to the scions or younger members of a family. Except in its technical sense in falconry (as in this line) it is now applied only in an uncomplimentary sense, e.g. to a troublesome child, a wicked spirit, etc.

9. yet a nobler task, i.e. a yet nobler task.10. still breed, continue to breed. 'But' in this line = except.

12. public faith ... public fraud. 'Public' = in public affairs. The reference is to the fact that the army leaders (chiefly Independents) charged the Parliament (chiefly Presbyterians) with misappropriation of the war funds, and with having taken bribes from royalists.

13. In vain, etc. : the sense is, "The blood of brave men will be shed in vain for a land which is given up to avarice and self-seeking." By synecdoche, 'Valour' is put for 'men of valour.' For 'rapine' see Il Pens. 40, note.

SONNET XVI.

This sonnet, written in 1652, was, like the preceding one, called forth by a particular occasion, and does not profess (as Prof. Masson points out) to be a general estimate of Cromwell's career. The 'proposals' referred to in the sub-title were made regarding the provision of competent maintenance for ministers, and similar questions : they were put forward by a Committee for the Propagation of the Gospel, which had been appointed by Parliament to consider how the confused state of Church affairs might be remedied. In the sonnet Milton calls upon Cromwell to see that the Presbyterian party, aided by a section of Independents, did not succeed in imposing too great restrictions upon religious thought, or, at least, that it did not succeed in establishing a system of mercenary and self-seeking clergy.

1. our chief of men. Grammatically, 'our' may qualify 'chief.' Another explanation is that the phrase means 'chief of our men,' because in Elizabethan writers we often find an adjective or pronoun thus misplaced, e.g. in Shakespeare we have 'your height of pleasure' = 'height of your pleasure,' etc. "To Milton Cromwell was chief of men, in respect of his personal qualities and thorough-going liberality of opinion, and not merely as the foremost man in the Commonwealth" (Pattison).

2. but of detractions rude : the syntax is : "who, guided by faith, etc., hast ploughed thy way not only through a cloud of war, but also through a cloud of rude detractions." 'Cloud of war' is a classical expression : comp. nubem belli, Æn. x. 809.

3. Guided : this participle modifies 'who.' It will be noticed that there is no principal verb in the first eight lines : they form a string of clauses which together qualify 'Cromwell.' Who, in l. 1, is nominative to hast ploughed, hast reared, and (hast) pursued ; while stream, field, and wrath form the nominative to resounds. The effect of this involved construction is to make the pause in l. 9 very striking.

5. neck of crownèd Fortune : this is an unmistakable allusion to Charles I., expressed in Biblical language : comp. Gen. xlix. 8, "Thy hand shall be on the neck of thine enemies ;" also Tennyson's Dream of Fair Women, 141 : "I rode sublime on Fortune's neck."

6. God's trophies, memorials of God's victorious power. See note, Il Pens. 118.

7. Darwen stream ; this falls into the Ribble near Preston in Lancashire, where Cromwell routed the Scots in 1648 (see Son. xv.).

imbru'd, stained. This is an unusual application of the word, as its literal sense is 'soaked' or 'moistened.' Both imbrue and imbue are originally from a Latin root meaning to drink in or imbibe: imbrue is usually applied to material objects, and imbue to a person's mind, language, etc.

8. Dunbar field. The battle of Dunbar (Sept. 3, 1650), in which Cromwell defeated the Scots; they were not crushed, however, and Cromwell had to march south as far as Worcester before he finally overthrew the royalists. 'Resounds' is singular; it may be repeated with each of its three nominatives.

9. Worcester's laureate wreath. The battle of Worcester was fought on the 3rd of September, 1651, the anniversary of Dunbar. On the same day, seven years later, Cromwell died. Hence Byron's allusion to "his day of double victory and death." He called Worcester his 'crowning mercy'; hence Milton's allusion to the laureate wreath. 'Laureate,' composed of laurels, a token of victory. The title 'Poet Laureate' arose from an ancient university custom of presenting a wreath of laurel to graduates in rhetoric and poetry.

yet . still. Yet=nevertheless; still=yet (adverb of time).

remains To conquer, i.e. remains to be conquered. This idiom is a relic of an older use of the infinitive (comp. 'a horse to sell'), in which the word to has its full force as a preposition='much remains to the conquering.'

10. her is emphatic.

11. new foes. These are not the "new forcers of conscience" of Son. xiii., but still newer foes, viz., those Independents who were not in favour of full spiritual independence.

12. secular chains, i.e. the bonds of a State Church: Milton was in favour of absolute separation of Church and State. 'Secular' (Lat. seculum, an age or generation), that which belongs to the present age, as opposed to that which concerns a future life; hence the words 'secular' and 'sacred' have come to be opposed to each other, like 'temporal' and 'spiritual.'

13. Help: this is the only imperative in the sonnet; it begins the special appeal for which the poem was written.

14. hireling wolves: comp. Lyc. 114. The word 'hireling' expresses Milton's contempt for all who served the Church for payment, "whose Gospel is their maw."

whose Gospel, etc., i.e. whose sole object is to obtain worldly benefits for themselves. 'Gospel'=God-spell, the story of God: it is sometimes used as a general term for any religious system, and, still more widely, for any rule of life; e.g. we say that one man's gospel is to become rich, another's to become famous, and so on. It is aptly used in this sense by Milton, and at the same time suggests that Gospel which the clergy ought to have adopted.

'Maw' = stomach; used figuratively for appetite or desire: cf. Philippians iii. 19: "Whose God is their belly."

SONNET XVII.

This sonnet, written 1652, has the same immediate aim as the preceding one. It is addressed to Sir Henry Vane (1612-1662), who was then forty years of age: he is called 'the younger' because his father was then alive. He entered the Long Parliament as M.P. for Hull at the age of 27, having previously distinguished himself as Governor of Massachusetts in America. At the date of the sonnet he was a member of the Council of State. He was beheaded in 1662 on account of his republican sympathies. As an Independent he had taken keen interest in the questions of State and Church, and was of an enthusiastic and somewhat fanatical disposition. Attempts have recently been made to exalt his ability as a politician, but with dubious success. "Clever and attractive, a good speaker, and industrious and able in transacting business, he never became a wise politician; he was conceited and impetuous, and just as in religion he was given to mysticism and extravagant vagaries, so in politics he was a theorist and a dreamer who ruled his conduct by abstract considerations without recognising his own position or the needs of his times" (Saturday Review, Dec. 1888). Milton probably admired Vane as a supporter of the New Model of the army (1644-45), as the re-organiser of the navy, and as the champion of freedom of conscience in the Westminster Assembly of Divines (1641-49).

1. With this line compare the common expression, 'an old head on young shoulders.'

2. Than whom, etc. 'Than' here looks like a preposition governing 'whom': but than is a conjunction, and if followed by a noun or pronoun some word or words must be supplied before deciding whether the noun or pronoun is in the correct case; e.g. "I admire you more than he" = more than he admires you; "I admire you more than him" = more than I admire him. In the case of the relative whom it is difficult to supply the ellipsis: this is seen if a personal pronoun in the same case be substituted for it, e.g. "a better senator than him," which would be wrong. (Consult Fowler's Modern English Usage.)

3. helm of Rome. By a common metaphor taken from the steering of a ship we speak of the 'helm of a state,' i.e. its government. The highest council in Rome was the Senate.

gowns, not arms; senatorial wisdom, not generalship: comp. L'Alleg. 123. "Milton means, what is certainly true, that the fighting power of Rome could not have coped with these invaders had it not been directed by the administrative ability of the Senate" (Pattison).

4. The fierce Epirot ... African bold: Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, and Hannibal, the great Carthaginian general. Pyrrhus, one of the greatest generals of antiquity, invaded Italy in 280 B.C.: in his first campaign he gained a victory at Heraclea, but with such loss that he sent his minister Cineas to Rome with proposals of peace. These were rejected by the Senate: and Cineas, on his return, spoke of the Senate as an assembly of Kings. The war continued till 278.

Hannibal was compelled by his father to swear eternal enmity to Rome. He fought against Rome from B.C. 219 till his death thirty-seven years later.

5. Whether to settle peace, etc.: these infinitive clauses are explanatory of 'sage counsel,' l. 1. 'Settle peace'=arrange terms of peace; 'unfold the drift of hollow states'=lay bare the real intentions of untrustworthy foreign governments. 'Drift'=aim or meaning, literally 'that which is driven'; in colloquial English we say, 'What are you driving at?'=What is your meaning?

6. hard to be spelled, not easily understood. Milton here compliments Vane as a skilful diplomatist during the naval war with Holland (1652). It has been suggested that the word 'hollow' in this line is a semi-pun on Holland.

8. two main nerves, i.e. the two chief requisites for carrying on a successful war, viz., arms and wealth. The idea is a common one, occurring in Greek and Latin writers, and being still current in the phrase "sinews of war" (Greek neuron, a sinew). Cicero speaks of money as nervi belli; and Tacitus has the words "No peace without war, no war without money."

9. equipage, necessary materials: what Shakespeare calls "pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war."

10. spiritual power and civil. The meaning is: 'Thou hast learned (as few have done) what the true nature of civil and ecclesiastical rule is, how they differ from each other, and what their relations ought to be.' For 'civil,' see note, Il Pens. 122.

11. which few have done: the antecedent to the relative is the whole object of the verb 'hast learned,' viz., 'to know both . . . each.' The phrase corresponds to an explanatory clause in Latin introduced by quod.

12. bounds of either sword, i.e. the limits of the power of the Church (=the sword spiritual), and of the State (the sword temporal). Some would identify these with the "two-handed engine," Lyc. 130.

13. Religion is said to look to Vane for support as a mother does to her eldest son. Cf. Genesis xlix. 3.

SONNET XVIII.

This sonnet, written in 1655, refers to a massacre in April of that year of the inhabitants of certain Piedmontese valleys in North Italy. These people (Vaudois or Waldenses) had, in their poverty and seclusion, preserved a simplicity of worship resembling that of the early days of Christianity; but in January, 1655, they were ordered by the Turin government to conform to the Catholic religion. Those who refused were to leave the country within three days under pain of death. Remonstrances were vain, a massacre was ordered, and for many days the Waldenses were exposed to the most frightful atrocities. When the news reached England the indignation reached a white heat, and Cromwell sent letters (written in Latin by Milton) and an ambassador to the offending Duke of Savoy demanding the withdrawal of the cruel edict; a Fast Day was appointed; and the sum of £40,000 was subscribed for the relief of the sufferers. The result was that they were allowed to return in peace to their valleys and to worship in their own way.

3. Even them who kept thy truth: see note above. 'Kept so pure' = preserved so free from the ritual that had crept into the Roman Catholic Church. 'Them' is the object of 'forget not.'

4. worshipt stocks. Milton considered Roman Catholicism to be idolatrous. 'Worshipt' = worshipped. Now that the participles of such words are almost exclusively formed by -ed the final consonant is doubled, thus, worshipped: this indicates the nature of the vowel sound; compare the sound of 'hoped' and 'hopped,' 'striped' and "stripped."

5. in thy book, etc. Here again we have biblical phraseology: comp. Psalms xvi. 8, "My tears, are they not in thy book?"

their groans Who, i.e. the groans of them who: see note, L'Alleg. 124.

7. Slain, who were slain.

rolled Mother with infant, etc. Such an incident actually took place. "A mother was hurled down a mighty rock with a little infant in her arms; and three days after was found dead with the child alive, but fast clasped between the arms of the mother, which were cold and stiff, insomuch that those that found them had much ado to get the child out."

9. "The valleys redoubled (=re-echoed) their cries to the hills, and the hills in turn redoubled them to heaven."

10. martyred blood and ashes sow, an allusion to Tertullian's saying, "The blood of Christians is the seed of the Church." Milton prays that this massacre may be the means of spreading Protestantism wherever Roman Catholicism prevails.

11. doth sway, governs, holds sway.

12. The triple Tyrant, the Pope, in allusion to the triple crown (tricornifer) or tiara worn by him as head of the Roman Catholic Church. Comp. Fletcher's words in Locusts—

"Three mitred crowns the proud impostor wears,
For he in earth, in hell, in heaven will reign."

that from these, etc., in order that from the blood and ashes of the Waldenses the number of Protestants may increase a hundredfold. 'Hundredfold' is here treated as a plural antecedent of 'who.'

13. thy way, God's way, the true religion.

14. fly, flee from, avoid. For this use of 'fly' comp. Sams. Agon. 1541.

the Babylonian woe, Papacy: see Rev. xvii. and xviii. The Puritans considered the Church of Rome to be the Babylon there mentioned.

SONNET XIX.

This sonnet, probably written in 1655, is one of Milton's first references in poetry to that blindness which had gradually crept upon him since 1644 and had in 1652 blotted out his sight for ever. He continued, in spite of his affliction, to act as Secretary for Foreign Tongues to the Council of State during Cromwell's protectorate. But in this sonnet he seems to despair of making further use of his genius as poet. This mood passed away (cf. Son. xxii.).

1. spent, exhausted.

2. Ere half my days, sc. 'are spent.' His blindness was total when he was 44 years old: he died in 1674.

dark world and wide. These are touching words in the mouth of a blind man.

3. that one talent. The full construction is, 'and (when I consider how) that one talent, which (it) is death to hide, (is) lodged with me useless.' Talent (Lat. talentum, a balance)= something weighed in a balance ; hence applied to ' money ' and metaphorically (as in the Scripture parable of the talents) to ' God's gift ' : the word has thus acquired the sense of ' a natural gift or ability,' and there is even an adjective from it—' talented ' =clever, possessing natural ability. Milton modestly compares himself to the servant who had received only one talent (see Matt. xxv.) ; he refers to his poetic genius.

which is death to hide, i.e. to hide which is death. To leave one's powers unemployed is equivalent to mental and spiritual death.

4. more bent, sc. ' is ' : ' bent,' determined.

6. lest He returning chide, i.e. lest He, on his return, reprove me for sloth. This use of the present participle, instead of an adverbial clause, is a Latinism : see note, Son. xiii. 14. In the parable mentioned above, we read : " After a long time the lord of these servants cometh and maketh a reckoning with them."

7. Doth God exact day-labour. The allusion is to St. John, ix. 4 : " We must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day ; the night cometh, when no man can work."

light denied : absolute construction, equivalent (as often in Latin) to a conditional clause, = if light is denied.

8. I fondly ask. ' Fondly ' = foolishly : see Il Pens. 6, note. This is the principal clause on which the preceding seven lines depend : the whole passage well illustrates the involved nature of Milton's syntax. It may be analysed thus—

A. Principal clause : I fondly ask, etc.

Under { 1. Doth God .. denied (subst. clause).

A. { 2. When I consider .. chide (adv. clause).

Under { (1) How my light is spent (subst. clause).

2. { (2) (How) that one talent .. useless (subst. clause).

Under (1) a. Ere half .. wide (adv. clause).

Under (2) { b. Which is death to hide (adj. clause).

c. Though my soul .. account (adv. clause).

Under c. (a) Lest .. chide (adv. clause).

10. his own gifts, i.e. the talents entrusted by Him to man.

Who : for construction, see note, Son. xii. 12.

12. thousands, i.e. thousands of angels. ' Angel ' is literally ' messenger.' See Par. Lost, iv. 677.

13. post, hasten. Primarily post = something fixed ; then a fixed place or stage on a line of road ; then a person who travels from stage to stage ; and finally any quick traveller.

14. stand and wait, i.e. ' those who, unable to do more, calmly submit to God's purposes, also render Him genuine service.'

SONNET XX.

This sonnet, written in 1655 or 1656, proves that even in his blindness Milton could be L'Allegro as well as Il Penseroso. It is addressed to a son of that Henry Lawrence who was President of Cromwell's Council (1654) and a member of his House of Lords (1657). We do not know which of his sons is meant, but it was probably Edward, then about twenty-two years of age. He was one of a number of young men who, admiring Milton's genius, delighted to visit him, to talk with him, read to him, walk with him, or write for him.

1. of virtuous father virtuous son : comp. Horace, Odes. I. xvi., "O matre pulchra, filia pulchrior." On 'virtuous' see note, Il Pens. 113.

2. Now that the fields, etc. : now, when the fields, etc. The use of 'that' for 'when' was once extremely common, but its use is now rare except after the adverb 'now.' (Abbott, § 284.)

ways are mire. 'Mire' is used attributively. In Eliz. English the word occurs as noun, verb, and adjective: other adjectival forms are miry and mirish.

3. Where shall we sometimes meet? a question which implies that, as they can neither walk into the country nor in the streets, they must meet indoors.

4. Help waste, i.e. help each other to spend : see note, Arc. 13. Compare Horace, "morantem saepe diem mero fregi"; also Milton's Epitaphium Damonis, 45.

what may be won, etc. : 'thus gaining from the inclement season whatever good may be got by meeting together'; the pleasures indoors will compensate for the loss of our walks out-of-doors.

6. Favonius : a frequent name in Latin poetry for Zephyr, the West Wind (see L'Alleg. 19); it was this wind that introduced the spring, 'melting stern winter,' as Horace says. In one of his masques Jonson calls Favonius "father of the spring."

reinspire : here used literally, 'to breathe new life into.'

8. neither sowed nor spun : an allusion to Matt. vi. 28, "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin, yet I say unto you that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." 'Spun' is here a past tense; see note, Lyc. 102.

9. neat. This is from Lat. nitidus, bright, attractive.

10. Of Attic taste, 'such as would please the simple and refined

Athenian taste.' There may also be a kind of allusion to the fact that their food would be seasoned with 'Attic salt,' a common term for sparkling wit—for what are called in L'Allegro "quips and cranks."

11. artful, showing art or skill. This is its radical sense; it is now used in a less dignified sense, viz., wily or cunning. A similar change of meaning is seen in artless, cunning, etc. See note, L'Alleg. 141.

12. Warble : infinitive after 'hear.'

immortal notes : comp. L'Alleg. 137.

Tuscan, Italian : Tuscany being a compartment of Italy.

13. spare To interpose, etc., i.e. 'use them sparingly.' The Lat. parcere with an infinitive = 'to refrain from'; and the Latin verb temperare may mean either 'to refrain from' or 'to spare.' There is therefore no doubt of Milton's meaning.

14. not unwise, very wise. By a figure of speech the two negatives strengthen the affirmative sense : comp. 'no mean applause,' Son. xxi. 2.

SONNET XXI.

This sonnet was written about the same time as the preceding one, and in a similar mood of cheerfulness. Milton wishes, in Cyriac Skinner's company, to throw off for a time the cares and worries of his Secretaryship and calls upon his friend to lay aside his study of politics and of mathematical and physical science. Cyriac Skinner was grandson of Sir Edward Coke, the famous lawyer and judge (1549-1634), and author of numerous legal works of great value.

1. bench Of British Themis. Coke was Solicitor-General in 1592 and afterwards Attorney-General. 'Bench,' a long seat, hence a judge's seat, and so used metaphorically for Law and Justice. Themis, "the personification of the order of things established by law, custom, and equity."

2. no mean applause : see note, Son. xx. 14, above.

3. Pronounced. Pronuntiatio is a Latin term for the decision of a judge, and we speak of a judge pronouncing sentence. Comp. Lyc. 83.

in his volumes, e.g. The Institutes of the Laws of England, Reports, in 13 vols., and Commentaries on Lyttleton.

4. at their bar, i.e. in administering the law : 'bar' is used metaphorically for 'a legal tribunal.'

wrench, pervert, twist. Wrench and wrong are both allied to wring; so that wrong means strictly 'twisted,' just as right means 'straight.'

5. 'To-day resolve with me to drench deep thoughts in such mirth as will not afterwards bring regret.' 'To drench deep thoughts' may be compared with such phrases as 'to drown care.'

6. after, afterwards.

7. Let Euclid rest, etc.: lay aside the study of mathematics, physical science, and political questions. Skinner was a diligent student of all these subjects. Euclid, the celebrated mathematician, is here by metonymy put for his works: the name has almost become synonymous with Geometry.

Archimedes (B.C. 287-212), a mathematician and physicist of the highest order, lived at Syracuse: when that city was taken, he was killed while intent upon a mathematical problem. He wrote on conic sections, hydrostatics, etc.

8. what the Swede intend, sc. 'let rest.' The verb being plural 'Swede' must here be plural, just as we say 'the Swiss,' 'the French,' 'the Dutch,' etc., to denote a whole nation. 'Swede,' however, is not now so used, the adjective being 'Swedish' and the noun (singular only) 'Swede'; hence some editions read intends. When this sonnet was written, Charles X. of Sweden was at war with Poland and Russia, and Louis XIV. of France with Spain.

9. To measure life, etc., i.e. learn in good time how short life is, so that you may make the most of it. As Milton says in Par. Lost, "What thou liv'st Live well; how long or short permit to Heaven." 'Betimes' (by-time) = in good time: the final s is the adverbial suffix.

11. For other things, etc., i.e. Heaven has tenderly ordained that there shall be a time for mirth as well as anxious thought, and disapproves of the conduct of those who make a display of their anxiety and refuse to rejoice even when they may well do so. Comp. "Learn to jest in good time: there's a time for all things," Com. of Errors, ii. 2; also "Be not therefore anxious for the morrow: for the morrow will be anxious for itself: sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," Matt. xi. 34.

SONNET XXII.

This sonnet, omitted from the edition of 1673 owing to the reference in the closing lines, was written on the third anniversary of the day on which Milton's blindness became total: it must therefore have been composed in 1655.

1. this three years' day: in prose we say, 'this day three years,' 'three years this day,' or 'three years ago to-day,' all adverbial phrases. 'Three years' has the force of an adjective qualifying 'day.' Comp. "I saw not better sport these seven years' day," Shakespeare, 2 Henry VI. ii.

though clear To outward view, i.e. though apparently uninjured. Some of Milton's enemies taunted him with his 'lacklustre eye,' but he was able to say that his blindness had not altered the appearance of his face, though (he admits) 'in spite of myself, I am a deceiver.'

3. Bereft, deprived. Be is an intensive prefix, and reave is from the same A.S. word as rob: see Lyc. 107.

their seeing have forgot, i.e. have forgotten (= lost) their power of vision. For 'forgot' see note, Son. xi. 1.

4. their idle orbs, useless eyeballs. 'Orb' is here correctly used to denote the ball of the eye (Lat. orbis): compare Virgil's Aen. xii., oculorum orbis; also Sams. Agon. 591, "those dark orbs no more shall treat the light."

5. Of sun or moon, etc. The word or is here used four times, 'either' being understood before 'of.' Or is a corruption of either, not of other, and means 'any one of two'; but it is often used where there are more than two objects noted.

7. bate a jot of, diminish in the least degree. 'Bate' is a contraction of 'abate.'

9. What supports me? Milton's answer is, 'I am supported in my affliction by the thought that I lost my sight through overexertion in the noble task of defending liberty.' 'Conscience' = consciousness or knowledge: the word is not now used in this general sense, and is so used only twice by Milton (see Par. Lost, viii. 502). It has still this meaning in French, but in English it is restricted to 'knowledge of right and wrong.'

10. them, i.e. my eyes.

overplied, overworked. 'Ply' is from Lat. plico, to fold or mould; and as in moulding clay the fingers must be kept steadily at work, 'ply' has come to signify constant and steady effort, e.g. to ply a task.

11. In Liberty's defence. The poet refers to his great pamphlet Defensio Pro Populo Anglicano, published in 1651, in reply to one by Salmasius, who condemned the execution of Charles I. The writing of this Defence and its sequel hastened Milton's blindness.

12. talks. So Milton very modestly wrote, but most editions have 'rings,' on the suggestion of an editor in 1694 (comp. Son. xv. 1). The compliment implied in the change is none too great, and therefore deserves to be noticed, though not incorporated in the text.

13. world's vain mask. It is common in poetry to liken the world and life to a play: comp. Shakespeare, "A stage where every man must play his part," a masquerade.

14. had I, etc., i.e. if I had no better guide.

SONNET XXIII.

This was his second wife, Catherine Woodcock, who died in childbirth in February, 1657, fifteen months after her marriage. She had been a good and faithful wife to him. This sonnet was probably written in 1658.

1. Methought: see note, Son. x. 11. Milton speaks as if he were recalling a dream.

espoused, married: from Fr. espouser, to marry (Lat. sponsus, promised). Strictly it may be applied either to husband or wife, though now generally used of the latter alone.

2. Alcestis, wife of Admetus, king of Phæria in Thessaly: on the day of his marriage with Alcestis, Admetus neglected to offer a sacrifice to Artemis, but Apollo reconciled the goddess to him, and induced the Fates to grant him deliverance from death if his father, mother or wife would die for him. His wife died in his stead, but was brought from the lower world by Hercules, "Jove's great son."

4. Rescued: participial idiom; comp. Son. xiii. 14.

5. Mine: pronoun, subject to 'came,' l. 9.

as whom, i.e. as or like (those) whom, etc. The antecedent of the relative is not expressed.

6. Purification. By the Old Law is meant the Mosaic law, which enjoined certain ceremonies of purification upon mothers after child-birth. See Leviticus xii.

7. And such as yet, etc., i.e. and such as I trust yet, etc.

8. without restraint. This is an allusion to the legal restrictions upon women under the Old Law noted above.

9. all in white, as if denoting that ceremonial uncleanness ended with death: cf. Revelation, vii. 13, 14.

10. Her face was veiled. This may signify that Milton had never actually seen his wife, and could not therefore picture her face in his dreams.

my fancied sight, i.e. the eye of my fancy = my imagination.

11. shined, shone. In early English shine is a strong verb, shinen being the past participle and shone the past tense. But as early as the fourteenth century shined occurs as a past tense.

12. There seem to be two comparisons involved in this line : 'love, etc , shone more clearly in her face than they have ever done in any other ' ; and ' love, etc., shone with more delight in her face than in any other.'

13. as, while ; introduces a temporal clause.

inclined, bent over me.

14. day brought back my night, i.e. daybreak recalled me to the knowledge of my blindness (and loneliness). This verbal contradiction between 'day' and 'night' is very striking.
